Ready for Business, Anyway

A well-dressed peddler cautiously made his way into the manager's office, and coughed to call attention to himself.

"Well," said the manager, "what do you want?"

"I am introducing," the peddler began, "an automatic electric hairbrush—"

"Can't you see I'm bald?" growled the manager.

"Your wife, perhaps—"

"She's bald, too, except when she's dressed up."

"Perhaps your son, sir?"

"He's 1 month old, and quite bald."

"Quite so," said the peddler. "Have you a dog?"

"Yes, a Chinese hairless poodle."

The peddler dived into another pocket.

"Allow me," he said, "to show you the latest thing in flypaper."—[London Answers.

RIVER'S FUTURE IS PREDICTED

Hydroelectric Work Must Come, Says Davis

Government Party Finishes Long Journey

Traveled Down Colorado in Boats

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

FLAGSTAFF (Ariz.) Sept. 23.—That the hydroelectric development of the Colorado River in Arizona must inevitably come and that it cannot much longer be delayed was the assurance given by Arthur P. Davis, director of the United States reclamation service and other distinguished government and corporation engineers to a group of Flagstaff men at a luncheon given here yesterday.

The guests, twelve in number, comprised the official group which had just completed reconnaissance trip down the Colorado in boats from Hall's Crossing (Utah) to Lee's ferry, a distance of 120 miles. Besides Mr. Davis there were Herman Stabler, chief engineer of the Land Classification Board United States Geological Survey; Col. C. H. Birdseye, chief engineer topographic branch of same department; H. W. Dennis, chief construction engineer Southern California Edison Company; Charles Kahler, electrical engineer Union Pacific Railway System; E. C. Larue, hydraulic engineer United States Geological Survey; Lewis R. Freeman of Pasadena, author and lecturer; R. E. Caldwell, State engineer of Utah and Utah representative on Colorado River commission; Clarence C. Stetson, assistant to U. S. Secretary of commerce Herbert Hoover; Franklin Thomas, professor civil engineering California Institute of Technology; John A. Widstoe, former president University of Utah, Salt Lake, and R. D. Young, irrigation expert of Richfield (Utah.) The party left here to inspect Diamond Creek dam site and then part of them will go down the river in boats to Needles.

MEXICO HITS AT REBELS IN SINALOA

Strong Force of Troops Sent for Revolutionists in North

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 23.—Heavy detachments of troops under Gen. Estrada, former Minister of War, are being hurried northward. A stong campaign is being made against revolutionary bands in Chihuahua, Sinaloa and Northern Durango. Pacification of other States permits this northern campaign.

It is reported that more than 300 of the State forces of Guerrero rebelled this week to the cry of "long live Murguia." They exacted loans, took horses and sacked stores. They took the road toward the important mining town of Taxico with the intention of capturing it. Federal forces engaged them just outside the city, killing many and capturing others who will be court-martialed. It is expected they will be executed.

President Obregon has termed the quarrel of political parties and the assassinations of two Deputies in Tabasco as a shame, not only to the State but the Mexican nation. He has ordered Federal troops into the State to restore order and afford protection to all parties so that Congress may meet with safety in the State capital.

Five Minute Old Infant Says 'Mother'

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

MASON CITY (Iowa) Sept. 23.—"An accident, but a most unusual accident," is the opinion expressed today by physicians of the city on the unprecedented performance of the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Santes who called "Mother" three times, five minutes after his birth in a hospital here yesterday.

The enunciation was so clear that attending physicians and nurses were amazed. Since these three initial calls, however, his vocal efforts have been confined to the customary vocabulary of an infant. The difficulty in uttering the "th" sound, which is so marked in the average babe's pronunciation of the word, makes the feat the more remarkable, doctors point out.

FEAR TUBERCULOSIS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

OMAHA, Sept. 23.—Word from Battle Creek, Neb., says that farmers of the county, fearing that tuberculosis among live stock can be transferred to their children, are co-operating with the Farm Bureau agent in a county-wide movement to eradicate the disease.

THEATER BAN LEGAL

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DES MOINES, Sept. 23. — The Iowa Supreme Court, in the Ames motion-picture case in which J. B. Gerbracht, theater proprietor, tested a Sunday-closing ordinance passed by the Ames City Council, ruled that the city was within its rights in passing such an ordinance thus rendering the film ban legal.

ROBBERS STEAL LIVE STOCK

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 23.—Four armed thieves raided the J. A. McCorquodale farm near Olivia and while one of the gang held the farm hand at bay the other three loaded forty-one pigs and 150 chickens into a motor truck and fled. Some of the pigs weighed more than 150 pounds.

MISSIONARY DIES IN INDIA

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 23.—O. Elil Lindstrom, age 30, a graduate of the University of Minnesota and missionary from the Peoples Church, Pleasant avenue and Chestnut street, is dead at Bombay, India, according to a cablegram received yesterday by the Rev. H. T. Williams, pastor of the church.

NO ONE SPARED BY JURY

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

MARION (Ill.) Sept. 23.—The special grand jury investigating the twenty-two killings at the Lester strip mine June 21 and 22 today returned 152 additional indictments, bringing the total to 214, in a partial report censuring the State administration, Adjt.-Gen. Black of Illinois, Sheriff Melvin Thaxton of Williamson (this) county and local police.

The jury, after making its report, recessed until October 23.

The report declared the "State administration undoubtedly realized the acute situation at Herrin," and asserted the "Adjutant-General's office and the Sheriff alternated in passing responsibility, with neither taking decisive action to prevent disorders and protect property."

CRIMES HORRIBLE

"The atrocities and cruelties of the murders," the report emphasized, "are beyond the power of words to describe. A mob is always cowardly, but the savagery of this mob in its relentless brutality is almost unbelievable. The indignities heaped upon the dead did not end until their bodies were interred in unknown graves."

The jury returned a total of forty-four indictments for murder, fifty-eight for conspiracy to commit murder, fifty-eight for rioting and fifty-four for assault to murder.

The report stated a telegram from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, was one of the causes of the riot. The telegram was to State Senator William Sneed, a district president of the miners' union, and declared the union men "are justified in treating this crowd as an outlaw organization and in viewing its members in the same light as they do any other common strike-breakers."

This telegram was posted at various places, the report declared, and shortly thereafter the strip mine was attacked, after hardware stores had been rifled for firearms and weapons.

UNIONISTS INDICTED

Among those indicted today were Hugh Willis, district board member of the Illinois mine workers, who was charged with murder and assault to commit murder, and Will Davis, secretary of subdistrict No. 10, of the miners' union, who was charged with murder.

The report directed attention to the fact that Sheriff Thaxton is a member of the miners' union, and also is a candidate for County Treasurer, and that "either because of loyalty to the union or from fear of injuring his candidacy, the sheriff made no demand for troops, nor did he take adequate measures to preserve the peace." The sheriff, the report stated, could not have been unaware that an attack on the strip mine was being contemplated.

"The State administration undoubtedly realized the acute situation upon sending to Williamson county Col. Hunter, of the adjutant general's staff," the report continued, adding that although Col. Hunter made several requests for troops, the adjutant general denied his authority to send them except, upon the request of the sheriff.

NO LAW HINDRANCE

The report then declared there was no law limiting the authority of the adjutant general in this regard.

The "local police" of the various towns in Williamson county were censured for alleged failure to take proper steps to prevent the disorders.

The Southern Illinois Coal Company, which owns the strip mine, was declared to have been "woefully ignorant of the danger of its operations or blindly determined to risk strife and conflict if profits could be made."

The report stated it was "foolhardy to attempt to operate a non-union mine in the very heart of the miners' union in view of existing conditions."

It is planned to have the trials as speedily as possible. County officials expressed the belief the series of trials would extend over a period of from four to six months.

Americans Get Paris Honors in Opera Comique

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PARIS, Sept. 23.—In the annual competition for prizes in opera and opera comique held yesterday at the American Conservatory of Music at Fountainbleau, Miss Gertrude Courtney of Spartanburg, S. C., and Mrs. Morton Harris of New Yorw carried away first honors in opera. Miss Vivian Hiles of Mason City, Iowa, received second prize. First prize for opera comique was unanimously "awarded by the jury to Mrs. Tess Davidson of Sioux City, Iowa. Miss Hilda Grace Berkey of Pittsburg, won first honorable mention.

PRESSER FINDS RING

Fails to Return It, Police Say, and Lands in Jail

When W. L. Johnson, aged 21, a clothes presser, ironed a $1500 diamond ring out of a suit he was working on yesterday in the Modern Cleaners, 213 West Fourth street, he thought that fortune smiled on him.

When Detectives Knowles and Knapp searched his room at 631½ South Main street last night and found the ring in his dresser drawer, according to their report, he lost his smile. He was booked for grand larceny and placed in jail.

The jewelry was said to have been the property of N. H. Gosser, guest at the Van Nuys Hotel, who sent his suit "to the cleaners" early yesterday.

OIL AND BANK DIDN'T MIX

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 23.—Charged with illegal banking tactics which resulted recently in the closing of the Pioneer State Bank at Burlingame, W. A. McCaslin of Topeka, and C. W. Gould of Burlingame today were placed under arrest. The men are identified with the Triangle Oil Company. The bank is said to have suffered a loss of $70,000 through its transactions with the oil promoters.

FIGHTS FOR GOOD NAME OF UNBORN

Accused by Husband, Woman Bares Her Soul in Court, and Wins Case

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 23.—Mrs. Teresa C. Townsend, former Columbus, O., society girl, today told in open court here the sacred love secrets of all that is womanly to dispute the charges of her husband, Maj. Frederick W. Townsend, prominent Arrowhead Hospital physician, that he is not the father of an unborn child.

Near midnight on the night of February 7, Maj. Townsend called friends to his bungalow at the hospital and branded his wife as common, he admitted on the witness stand, naming a hospital attache, F. R. Boger, as the man who had taken his place in his wife's affections.

Both Boger and Mrs. Townsend vowed on the witness stand that they had only a passing acquaintance. The physician said he watched his home at the hospital every night for weeks and saw many strange things to support his suspicions.

On the witness stand today the Army officer said he doubted the parentage of the unborn child. Mrs. Townsend sobbed for the first time during the trial in which she demanded separate maintenance.

Holding her head high, Mrs. Townsend followed her husband on the stand today and told a story of how she had forgiven him even after he had falsely accused her before her friends. In his arms, she loved him again, she said.

Judge J. W. Curtis denounced Maj. Townsend's accusations against his wife, who is twenty-four years his junior, and already the mother of a 2-year-old boy.

"The testimony of the doctor accusing his wife," said Judge Curtis, "is absolutely uncorroborated. I don't believe he saw Boger leaving his home. I don't believe for one minute that Mrs. Townsend is untrue."

She was awarded $150 per month separate maintenance. She is going back to her home and mother in Columbus, O., she said.

BABE RUTH ANNOUNCES HE'S DADDY

King of Swat and Wife, However, Can't Agree on When Daughter Born

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23. — 16-months-old Dorothy Ruth is likely enough the daughter of George Herman (Babe) Ruth, erstwhile home-run king, and Mrs. Ruth, but there are startling discrepancies in the statements today of Ruth in Cleveland and Mrs. Ruth in the family suite at Hotel Ansonia, here, regarding the time and place of the child's birth.

Mrs. Ruth declared the child was born to her at St. Vincent's Hospital on June 7, 1921. St. Vincent's is a Catholic hospital.

Babe Ruth, in the clubhouse at Dunn Field, Cleveland, this afternoon said his daughter would be 2 years old next February 2, and that she was born at Presbyterian hospital, New York. Ruth is a Catholic.

Mrs. Ruth said she was, naturally, in a way to know just when and where the child was born. She says Dorothy's father was very careless about dates. She could not account for his having muffed the name of the hospital.

Told that the date he named and that given by Mrs. Ruth as that of Dorothy's advent were more than four months apart, Babe said he guessed he might have been mistaken. Informed that Mrs. Ruth had fixed June 7, as the day, Ruth said: "I guess she knows."

Dorothy, wherever and whenever she came into the world so unexpectedly that she weighed but forty ounces and for four months had to be nurtured in an incubator, posed for photographers today in Mrs. Ruth's arms, said "mama" and "dad" nicely, insisted on kissing interviewers and fairly revelled in the much ado about her. She has a retrousse nose like the sultan of swat, a crown of light yellow ringlets, and sixteen teeth—one for every month, as Mrs. Ruth said.

JUDGE OF PLACER COUNTY APPOINTED

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 23.—The appointment of J. D. Landis as judge of the Superior Court of Placer county, was announced at the office of Gov. Stevens late today. Landis, who is District-Attorney of Placer county, will fill the vacancy created by the death of Judge J. E. Prewett.

Asks Divorce on Anniversary

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 23.—On her thirty-first wedding anniversary, Mrs. Flora A. Fegan, age 60, started suit for divorce yesterday against John R. Fegan, age 65. The couple were married in 1891 at Logan, Iowa, and have lived in Minneapolis for a decade.

ST. LOUIS GERMANS PROTEST

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 23.—A letter of protest against the action of Mayor Kiel and civic bodies in inviting Georges Clemenceau, war-time Premier of France, to visit St. Louis on his American tour this winter was sent to Mayor Kiel today by John C. Meyers, secretary and manager of the German-American Citizens' League.

WAR OPPOSED BY BRITISH PUBLIC

Workers, Tradesmen Against Any Anti-Turk Move

Cessation of Levant Trade Works Hardships

General European Conditions Improving Slowly

BY FRANCIS W. HIRST

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

[Copyright, 1922, Public Ledger.]

LONDON, Sept. 23. — Preparations for isolated action involving war against Turkey are so unpopular with the working classes and business men that the government is expected to "climb down" unless the Turks precipitate the conflict. This belief explains the stock market's recovery after Monday's heavy marking down of prices.

British investors in Turkish and Greek loans have suffered and will suffer more unless impending bankruptcy be averted by peace and new credits. Heavy losses have been inflicted on British merchants in Smyrna by lootings and devastation of both armies.

The important Levant trade is at a standstill. Lancashire shipped 256,000,000 yards of cotton cloth to the Levantine the first seven months of the year. The loss of this market therefore would be serious, especially when trade with China and South America is bad.

The new American tariff also furnishes cause for anxiety, as certain to curtail nearly all exports of British staples to America. The British treasury apparently purposes paying the debt installment in gold and securities, which will postpone exportation of goods. Fortunately the Lancashire weavers are moderately well employed for the Indian market, but spinning mills are working at unprofitable rates and short time is proposed.

The raw cotton market has fluctuated through the prevailing uncertainty and anxiety about affairs on the continent and in the Near East. All branches of wool manufacture remain busy. Cardiff is still shipping coal to America, but ocean freights are dull. The Cleveland pig iron trade is busily employed on American orders.

Reports from Scandinavia indicate improving business, except for renewed banking troubles in Denmark. Employment is almost normal in Norway.

Lack of liquid capital in Germany explains the rise of the Reichsbank rate. The London money market is still rather tight, but the three months discount rate is below 2½ per cent. Fall in the interest rate during the year accounts for the reduced Bank of England dividend.

Unemployment figures improve slowly. Last week's total of 1,300,000 is less than in Janury, but large sums are being appropriated to provide work for the unemployed during the winter.

Comparatively few new issues have been floated recently, but negotiations for a loan to China, independent of the consortium, are near completion, I understand. Chinese treasury bills have risen several points in consequence. Success of the loan previous to the war is recalled, and expansion in Chinese customs adequate to finance the needs of the government is confidently predicted.

The future of sterling and dollar exchange is much debated here. The Manchester Guardian predicts decline in sterling and fall in raw cotton values and of other necessary purchases from America in consequence of the new tariff and the war-debt payments, but rise in dollar prices and fall in the purchasing power of gold may affect this. The tendency toward strict limitation of British paper money continues.

RICH YOUTH OF OAKLAND TO PRISON

Must Serve Long Term for Driving Automobile While Intoxicated

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN QUENTIN (Cal.) Sept. 23. Phillip C. Valentine, Oakland youth, son of the late John J. Valentine, former president of the Wells Fargo Express Company, was received at the State prison here today to serve an indeterminate term of from one to five years imposed in San Jose, Cal., following his plea of guilty to a charge of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

Valentine was arrested by a speed officer after his machine, which the officer was pursuing, struck a machine in which Miss Miriam Donald, a school teacher, was riding, seriously injuring her. The amputation of one of Miss Donald's legs was necessary, and she subsequently sued Valentine for $105,000 damages. The suit is pending.

INVESTIGATION FOR THEATER ACCIDENT

PROPRIETOR SAYS BUILDING WAS RECENTLY PASSED BY AUTHORITIES

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PITTSBURG (Pa.) Sept. 23.—City officials conducting an investigation of the collapse of the foyer of the Strand theater yesterday began to take statements from some of the fifty-eight children, most of whom were injured when the concrete floor dropped to the basement.

Madeline Kunkle, 8 years old, one of those invited to the free showing of the picture, "The Trap," was killed and eighteen of the injured are in hospitals. Only four are in a critical condition.

A crew of men worked in the chasm today clearing away the debris.

A city building inspector reviewed the ruins and reported the flooring had been improperly constructed. Sol Selznick, the proprietor, who was seriously injured, said the the building was inspected two months ago and pronounced sound.

JOHNNY REBS IN FOR DRUBBING

G.A.R. Delegates Likely to Take Action

Confederates Have Small Chance for Fight

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DES MOINES, Sept. 23.—Echoes of the cannon which bellowed against the seceding States of the South sixty years ago, may be heard in resolutions to be offered the representatives of the G.A.R. encampment at its business session next Thursday, condemning the action taken by the Confederate veterans in their national gathering at Richmond last June.

LINCOLN ASSAILED

The name of Abraham Lincoln, the idol of the men who are assembling here for their annual reunion, which begins tomorrow, was assailed by the southern veterans, Grand Army men declare in the resolution adopted by their organization, which asserted that Lincoln personally conceived and impelled the War of the Rebellion. The statement of the Confederate veterans may be answered, although officials of the Grand Army, speaking unofficially, say that the charge probably will be ignored.

Closely linked with the action of the Confederate veterans is said to be the determination to resist appeals from the South for the return to that section of the Union of battle flags captured in action and now displayed in State buildings of every Northern State, it is said.

BREACH WIDENED

Confederate soldiers have waited for the coming of the day when the old-time belligerency would have softened and they would again possess the flags and banners under which they marched into battle.

Some of the Grand Army veterans expressed the opinion today that the resolution directed against President Lincoln may have removed all possibility of any such a movement securing the indorsement of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Gaylord Davidson of Charleston, W. Va., himself a Confederate veteran, has attempted to secure a hearing before the business sessions of the fifty-sixth G.A.R. encampment to repudiate, at least in part, the official action of the Confederate soldiers. He explains that the resolution referring to Lincoln was adopted when the convention hall was practically deserted and that it does not represent the views of a majority of the Confederate veterans.

VETERANS ARRIVE

Special trains bearing full quotas of the advance guard of Grand Army Veterans from distant States will begin pouring their thousands of blue-coated Civil war heroes into Des Moines tomorrow.

By midnight Sunday the majority of the 15,000 veterans expected will have reached the city. Several special trains arriving Monday will complete the delegation.

With one or two exceptions the entire general staff of national officers have arrived in the city, and plans are complete for housing and entertaining the Grand Army men. Junior officers of the various connected organizations, and state departments are here opening up their headquarters at the various hotels.

Pulpits of Des Moines churches will be occupied tomorrow by veterans of the Civil war.

TYROS CAN PILOT "SAFETY" AIRPLANE

MACHINE SO SIMPLIFIED IT WILL GUIDE SELF IN AIR

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DAYTON (O.) Sept. 23.—Perfection of a new "safety" airplane, which can be flown after four hours' training, was announced today by the Dayton Wright Airplane Company.

Mechanism of the plane has been so simplified, the manufacturers assert, that the ship will guide itself after being taken into the air.

Kenneth Lane, a Dayton youth, spent four hours in the plane with an instructor. Then he ascended in the plane alone, and not only resorted to straight flying, but accomplished "stunts" which experienced aviators hitherto have been able to perform only after long training, the company announcement said.

Col. V. E. Clark, designer for the Dayton Wright Company, is given credit for making changes in the controls of the ship which have brought about the simplified flying system.

An old plane was converted and equipped with new mechanism.

COURT SETS ASIDE WILL OF RICH MAN

RELATIVES OF DECEASED SAY UNDUE INFLUENCE USED ON AGED RANCHER

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

FRESNO, Sept. 23.—The jury in the case of relatives of John Bubmeyer, wealthy Kings county rancher, who died a year ago, and willed his entire estate to Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Trout of Lemoore, versus Mr. and Mrs. Trout, brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs at Hanford this morning.

The will was set aside in the court decision. During the trial allegations were made by the contestants that undue influence had been exerted on the elderly rancher prior to his death. A deed signed by the deceased man, turning over valuable vineyard property to the Trouts, was made the basis of court action.

DRY NAVY ACTS ROUSE BRITISH

Conference at Washington Planned Soon

Situation in Near East May be Discussed

Geddes to Represent London at Meeting

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—A number of important international problems, including the activities of the prohibition navy and perhaps the question of the Near Eastern disturbances, are to be discussed here soon between representatives of the American and British governments.

Coincidentally with the adjournment of Congress, leaving President Harding free to devote greater attention to foreign relations, and with the return of Secretary Hughes from Brazil, Sir Auckland Geddes, the British Ambassador, has come back to Washington from his summer embassy quarters at Dark Harbor, Me., and is understood to be prepared for a series of conferences with American officials early next week.

SEEK MORAL AID

The intimation is given in official quarters that the situation in the Near East is of such widespread concern that it scarcely can escape mention in these discussions. So far as is known, there is no intention on the part of the British government to appeal to America to participate in physical measures in Asia Minor and European Turkey, but at the same time the British are said to feel that they have a right to expect at least the moral support of this government in so much of the British policy as invloves keeping the Dardanelles open to the world.

In British quarters it is declared that in the Paris peace negotiations America fully supported the decision to internationalize the straits and that other declarations of purely American policies touching China, Mesopotamia and other sections of the world, all declaratory of the "open door" principles, are regarded in British circles as laying down her accord with the British Dardanelles policy.

DRY NAVY ACTS

The activities of the American prohibition agents, involving seizure of British ships outside the three-mile limit, have reached a stage where it is indicated they can no longer fail to receive treatment diplomatically. The British government is expected to seek at once to come to some understanding with the State Department on that subject. Canadian pressure for a change of policy is becoming very urgent, nearly a dozen vessels under Dominion charter having been seized or searched outside of territorial waters.

There also are a number of features of the new tariff law which are looked upon abroad with apprehension and representations in connection with them are expected to come to the State Department from several foreign governments in the near future.

Syndicate Buys Vast Tract of Mountain Land

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 23.—One of the largest land deals of the year was recorded this morning when N. D. Nelson and A. Rempp, representing a syndicate, announced the purchase of upward of 28,000 acres of the old Cuyamaca ranch, located in the Cuyamaca Mountains, about fifty miles east of San Diego.

The purpose of the deal, Rempp explained, is to develop a winter and summer resort in Southern California that will rival Lake Tahoe in Northern California as the tract is adjacent to Cuyamaca Lake. Rempp said work is to start almost immediately on the construction of a 100-room hotel and that the acreage is to be subdivided into homesites for wealthy residents of San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Imperial Valley.

The syndicate buying the ranch has had inquiries from a number of wealthy residents of San Francisco who desire to establish summer homes in this part of the State, Rempp said, and he declared it is the purpose of the company to thoroughly advertise in eastern newspapers to bring wealthy easterners here for their winter residence.

Mexican Troops at Labomba to Crush Banditry

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MEXICALI, Sept. 23.—Word received in Mexicali at Federal headquarters told of the arrival in good shape of the Twenty-ninth Battalion at Labombo. The information was that the troops were immediately going aboard boat to complete their trip to Sinaloa, where they are taking the field to aid in the suppression of banditry of sporadic character in that State.

The movement of the troops across the desert on the foot march from Mexicali was an arduous piece of work in the excessively hot weather, which prevailed, but was accomplished in good form. The troops proved to be well seasoned and except for a few men weathered the march with small difficulty. They will arrive in the field of action after their boat ride in the best of form for the active duty that is ahead and that Mexican Federal authorities are confident will speedily result in clearing up definitely another annoying situation developed in the course of working out the readjustment requirements of the country.

Freight Reduced on Malted Milk

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—The Western Pacific Railroad Company announced today a rate of $1.01 to $1.59 a hundred pounds on malted milk in carload lots from eastern to western points. The present rate ranges from $2.25 to $3.38. The date for the going into effect of the new rate was not announced.

PLAN TO HIT PANAMA CANAL

Atlantic and Pacific Fleets to Have Mimic War

Army to Co-operate in Defense of Strongholds

Officers Eager to Prove Views of Naval Attack

Joint maneuvers of the Pacific and Atlantic fleets, planned for February, will take the form of an attack from the Pacific side upon the defenses of the Panama Canal, according to information received on the flagship California yesterday. The demonstration will, therefore, be a joint Army and Navy exercise and will be of absorbing interest to both services. The announcement sets at rest rumors of the Pacific Fleet's cruise to Hawaii.

A conference is to be held in the Navy Department chambers at Washington tomorrow at which the program for the maneuvers will be arranged. Holding of the conference has been delayed pending the return from Rio de Janeiro of Admiral Hilary P. Jones, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic Fleet. Admiral Jones reached New York on the 22nd inst., on the superdreadnaught Maryland and went immediately to Washington for the meeting.

TO ATTACK CANAL

The proposed attack on the defenses of the canal will present a number of new problems, naval officials point out. Through it the Army expects to test out a number of new plans which it has developed for the defense of the canal. The Navy is equally keen to try out its plans for the attack on the land fortifications.

Pacific Fleet officers declare that the attack of the combined United States fleet will prove conclusively whether or not the canal defenses are adequate. High officials, both in the Army and Navy, who lay importance on the control of the air, assert that with the help of the fleet the canal could be bombed to destruction with an efficient air force.

SPEND HOLIDAYS HERE

The Pacific Fleet will leave Los Angeles Harbor for Panama Canal waters shortly after January 1, according to present schedules, while the Atlantic Fleet will depart for the southern drill grounds immediately after it completes its present fall practice off the Delaware Capes. With the exception of the Oklahoma, which will then be undergoing overhaul at the Puget Sound navy yard, all dreadnaughts of the Pacific Fleet will take part in the attack on the canal defenses.

The superdreadnaught Maryland, although assigned to the Pacific Fleet, will hold its fall target practice with the Atlantic Fleet, while the dreadnaught Nevada will remain at Rio de Janeiro until late in December. The Nevada, however, will have her target practice with the Pacific Fleet at a later date and will arrive at the canal just about the time to take part in the joint practice.

SHORT VACATION PLANNED

The Pacific Fleet, as based on Los Angeles Harbor, will complete its fall gunnery exercises December 15. The ensuing period ending December 26 will be given over to leave and liberty, while the following week will mark the completion of ship and gun drills for the year. From then until the date of departure the dreadnaughts will take on supplies for the long run to Panama.

The program this year will be fundamentally the same as that arranged at the joint conference of the Army and Navy authorities last year, it is said, when, owing to the shortage of fuel, the orders for joint maneuvers were cancelled.

Nine Fighting Dreadnaughts Now in Port

The greatest array of fighting craft is at anchor in Los Angeles Harbor today since the return of the dreadnaught force from northern waters. With the return yesterday of the New Mexico from San Francisco and the Mississippi from annual overhaul at the Puget Sound Navy Yard, nine units of the battleship squadron are in port.

Immediately after the New Mexico dropped anchor in Man-o'-War Row the flag of Vice-Admiral William R. Shoemaker was run up at her main truck. The superdreadnaught Tennessee, which has been squadron flagship during the absence of the New Mexico, fired a fifteen-gun salute in honor of Admiral Shoemaker as he left the vessel.

Tomorrow morning the entire battle force will drop into the full swing of fall gunnery exercises on the drill grounds off the local coast. They will continue until the 30th inst., following which the dreadnaughts will undergo machinery overhaul in port and upkeep work until the second round of gunnery exercises, beginning October 16.

Next Wednesday morning the superdreadnaught Tennessee will sail for Puget Sound for annual overhaul, the dreadnaught force being reduced to eight units until the return of the Idaho, due from Puget Sound October 19.

News of Ships and Sailings at Pacific Ports

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TACOMA, Sept. 23.—There was a general shifting of big carriers at Tacoma today, with arrivals noted by steamship agents to and from coast and European ports. Lumber was among the larger cargo taken from Tacoma although the Kaga Maru, which sailed this evening, had flour and wheat among her freight.

The Pomona of the Admiral Line was an arrival this morning at the port pier, where this vessel will load a part cargo of lumber for the Orient. The Eldridge sailed from the port in the morning for the Orient after loading lumber. This vessel, also operated under the Admiral flag, took some wheat at the Balfour dock.

The Kinderdijk of the Holland-American Line was an arrival at the smelter, where the steamer loaded copper for Europe. It was thought the Kinderdijk would sail during the night. The Kongosan Maru after loading a part cargo of lumber at the port pier sailed this afternoon for the Orient.

The Northland, which arrived at the Baker dock last night, sailed this evening after loading at the Tacoma grain dock for California.

On her first trip to Tacoma, the steamship Ipswich in the service of the American-Hawaiian Line is due at the Baker dock Monday. This vessel will call at Charleston and Savannah with Tacoma cargo and other South Atlantic Coast ports. Under a new schedule adopted by the American-Hawaiian Line Tacoma products will have the benefits of the fortnightly service by this company to Gulf ports.

The Alaskan of the American-Hawaiian Line is due Wednesday at the Baker dock. This vessel is in Europe. Considerable inbound freight is reported to be on the vessel. Doors will be one of the large shipments out on the vessel.

The motorship Pedro Christopherson is due tomorrow at the smelter with ore. After discharging this vessel will go to Dupont where nitrates will be unloaded. The Santa Cruz of the Grace Line is expected at Tacoma Wednesday from Chile and Peru with ore.

The Steel Worker of the Isthmian Line is due at the port piers tomorrow to pick up a consignment of lumber for New York. The steamer may sail tomorrow night.

The Depere of the General Steamship Company Line arrived here this afternoon to load for west coast ports.

PORTLAND, Sept. 23.—The "pay-off" of longshoremen here today amounted to $45,000 in the aggregate, due to unusually heavy business in loading this past week. Prospects were that the activity on the docks would continue for several weeks to come.

Heated coal in the bunkers of the Japanese steamer Yuri Maru here today necessitated prompt measures to prevent a fire. A part of the coal was moved and the rest was flooded with water.

The Nawsco Line steamer Artigas arrived today with general cargo. After discharging her Portland freight she will proceed to Puget Sound to finish.

With a full passenger list for San Francisco, the steamer Rose City departed today.

ASTORIA, Sept. 23.—The steamer Artigas from Portland, Me., arrived this morning, via San Francisco and went to Portland.

Carrying 400,000 feet of lumber from the Hammond plant the steam schooner Halco sailed today for Los Angeles.

The steamer Robert Luckenbach, with freight from Portland and Astoria, sailed this morning from New York and Philadelphia.

After loading 6000 cases of canned salmon at the Astoria terminals the steamer Steel Exporter, which also carries general cargo from Portland, sailed last night for New York.

The Japanese steamer Tokufuku Maru, with wheat from Portland, sailed this morning for Colon for orders.

The steam schooner Annette Rolph with freight from Portland sailed this morning for Los Angeles.

The Norwegian steamer Hannah Nielsen arrived this morning from Japan, bringing 1200 tons in oriental cargo which she is discharging at the Astoria terminals for reshipment to interior and Atlantic Coast points. The Japanese steamship Yoshida Maru, scheduled to sail tomorrow for Japan has besides general cargo from Portland 1,614,000 feet of lumber from Stevens, 700,000 feet from Wanna and 825,000 feet from the Hammond Lumber Company's plant.

SEATTLE, Sept. 23.—A meeting to be held in Portland Tuesday will result, it is expected among shipping men here, in a reorganization of the Trans-Pacific westbound freight rate conference and a stabilization of tariffs. Following a rate war, the conference was disbanded this year. The principal work of the conference is to be in connection with the forwarding of overland cargoes, which have the option of Puget Sound, the Columbia River and British Columbia. Freight offerings from the Middle West in large volume are anticipated in the next few months.

The Medon, a Shipping Board vessel that has never been in service, but has been tied up at Port Costa since she was built by the Hanlon Dry Dock and Construction Company at Oakland, is due to leave here September 29 to load 11,000 tons of copper ore at Cordova and Latouche. The Medon, which arrived here last night from the Alaska Steamship Company, which has purchased her, is commanded by Capt. C. V. Westerlund.

Delays by storms to three vessels in the north are reported here. The Victory A left Nome today after having been held up several days by bad weather. The Redondo arrived at Port Althorpe today after using seventeen days to discharge oil-drilling equipment at Cold Bay. She had to cope with repeated storms and undeveloped facilities there. The Brookdale is having trouble to land supplies for the United States Bureau of Education at St. George Island.

The barkentine Muscoota was towed to sea today from Port Townsend by the tug Sea Monarch.

The United States coast and geodetic survey steamer Wildcat, which has been operating in Alaskan waters is overdue one week at Yakutat from Icy Bay, according to advices received here. Capt. Gray of the gas boat Boife notified J. C. McBride, collector of customs at Juneau, he was starting on a search for the Wildcat.

PORT TOWNSEND, Sept. 22.—Bringing copper ore for Tacoma and nitrate for Dupont the Swedish motorship Christopherson reports by radio that she will arrive tomorrow morning from the west coast.

The Carey Davis tug Oregon departed this evening for Coos Bay, Or., where she is under charter for six months to the port commission, which has an option to purchase her at the end of that time.

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Sept. 22.—E. W. Greer & Son, Ltd., report the arrival of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha liner Toyooka Maru to load 3000 tons of flour, spelter, lumber and general, from the Orient. She will go direct to sea from Vancouver.

The O.S.K. liner Africa Maru is in port from the Orient with 600 tons to discharge and 1200 tons to load.

The Norwegian steamer Romsdalhorn is in port to be loaded full with lumber and copper for New York. She comes from Moji, Japan.

The Pacific Steamship Company steamship Wheatland Montana is due Thursday from the Orient with 10,000 bales of hemp for Vancouver discharge.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—Definite plans for bringing about a saving in fuel consumption of Shipping Board vessels are to be made public within a few weeks, it was announced at the offices of the board. One of the plans now before the board which has received serious consideration, it was said, is the sending of Shipping Board engineers to League Island to take an intensive course in firing boilers.

This plan was presented to the government by Capt. C. McAllister, chairman of the fuel conservation committee appointed by the board, and Capt. D. Robinson, chief of the board's engineering department.

The board is contemplating a bonus for engine-room crews, making a specified fuel record.

The first Shipping Board vessel to make a round trip under the 65 cents a day ration allotment was the tanker Stockton, which recently arrived in this port. The Stockton went to Manila. When she arrived here the entire crew, with the exception of the licensed officers, quit the ship, claiming the 65-cent ration was not sufficient.

The record of sailings and arrivals at this port today showed that seventeen vessels offshore and coastwise sailed, while fifteen arrived. This is said to be a Saturday record.

The President Pierce, last of the 535 liners to be assigned to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by the Shipping Board for the San Francisco-Oriental run, is expected to arrive here tomorrow.

PORT NOTES

On her first call at this port the British freighter Comeric arrived late yesterday from New York for bunkers. Operated by the Bank Transportation and Trading Company, she has a full cargo of general freight for the Orient. Her sister ship, the Orteric, is also en route here from New York.

Intercoastal trade via the Panama Canal increased nearly 100 per cent during the last year, according to a report just issued by the Panama Canal Record. The number of sailings increased from 822 to 555 in twelve months. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the cargo moving through the canal totaled 2,562,527 tons, as compared with 1,372,388 tons for the previous year.

Cargo tonnage on the intercoastal route was about equally divided between east-bound and west-bound sailings. Leading commodities from the Atlantic were iron and steel, coal, sulphur and manufactured articles. From the Pacific came lumber, canned goods and dried fruit, oil and metals. The comparisons of cargo tonnage for 1922 and 1921 were as follows:

	West-bound.	East-bound.
1922	1,288,075	1,274,452
1921	608,429	675,959

July of this year showed a slight increase over the previous month's traffic, which was taken to indicate that the effects of the intercoastal rate war, which broke out late in June, were beginning to show.

Bringing more than sixty passengers for this port from New York and Central American ports, the Pacific Mail liner Venezuela was due to arrive at daylight this morning. She also has a large cargo for local discharge.

The Japanese steamer Baltimore Maru is due here today to load bunkers before departing for Yokohama. She has a full cargo of bulk grain loaded at Columbia River ports. A sister ship, the Victoria Maru, is due in the same trade later this week.

Boosters for Junior High at Pasadena Unite

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PASADENA, Sept. 23.—Boosters for the junior high school system, which will have a test at a special election of the school district, October 5, formed a campaign committee of 100 today with N. P. Moerdyke as chairman and Police Judge Frank C. Dunham as vice-chairman. Other members of the executive committee are William Thum, W. H. Hubbard, Mrs. C. J. Hall, Mrs. Charles R. Dillman, C. O. Arnold, Mrs. Maude E. Salvater, Mrs. E. B. Spalding, I. N. Smith, J. J. Jones and William Easterbrook.

Mr. Moerdyke issued a statement in which he said the junior high plans were being opposed by a "small, but noisy, minority," and that the committee would put the facts before the public in the meetings. He declared the junior high scheme had the indorsement of nearly every prominent educator.

GIANT STEAMER BIDS FAREWELL

City of Honolulu Sails for Hawaiian Port

Full Passenger List and Cargo on Board

City of Los Angeles on Her Way Home

With the sirens of the Pacific Fleet bidding her bon voyage as she steamed out between the rows of dreadnaughts anchored in Man-o'-War Row, the liner City of Honolulu yesterday afternoon put Los Angeles' first direct passenger service to Honolulu in full operation. Glistening in her new dress of black and white the huge Pacific greyhound was a splendid sight as she majestically rounded Breakwater Light, decked out in full dress and with passengers lining her rails.

A cargo of 10,000 barrels of oil, a shipment of Southern California fresh fruits and a large consignment of other Southland products will be her first contribution to the new avenue of trade opened between Hawaii and Los Angeles by the craft and her sister ship in service, the City of Los Angeles.

BOUND HOMEWARD

Simultaneous with the departure of the City of Honolulu yesterday the City of Los Angeles sailed from Hawaii for Los Angeles with a capacity passenger list and a large cargo from the islands. Arriving here on the 30th inst., the City of Los Angeles will depart October 7 next, on her second voyage.

She will sail on that date also with a complete passenger list, according to R. F. Cullen, general passenger agent of the Los Angeles Steamship Company, who announced last night she is already booked nearly to capacity.

PASSENGER LIST

Among the passengers sailing yesterday on the City of Honolulu were:

Fred Heim, Long Beach merchant; Keiichii Yamasaki, Japanese Consul to Honolulu; B. S. Dennison, official of the Charles F. Dillingham Company of Honolulu; Mrs. D. M. Fields, of San Diego; Mrs. Bertha Walsh and daughters, Margaret and Helen, of Long Beach; Misses Enola and Olive McIntyre, of Los Angeles; Miss Myrtle Merwin, of the California Bank; Charles B. Lang, James Gerton and Charles Moffett, all of Hollywood.

The City of Honolulu is in command of Capt. H. R. Lester, one of the most popular skippers on the Pacific, while she has as chief steward George Mills, equally well known to Coast travelers.

NAVAL COMMANDER GIVEN NEW DUTIES

Commander Walter C. Roper, in command of the U.S.S. Nitro, ammunition supply ship to the Pacific battle fleet, has been named to take command of a division of Pacific Fleet destroyers with headquarters at San Diego. Official orders from the Navy Department providing for this change were received at fleet headquarters at the harbor yesterday. Commander Roper will be relieved of his present command by Commander Merlyn G. Cook, now executive officer aboard the dreadnaugh Oklahoma, a unit of the Sixth Battle Division, it was said at fleet headquarters.

The change in commands will become effective within the next few days.

MAN SAID TO HAVE POSED AS ACTOR ARRESTED AT BEACH

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA MONICA, Sept. 23.—A man giving the name of Ben Grow, but who is said by the police to have posed as Crane Wilbur, stage and cinema actor, was lodged in the city prison here today under suspicion of obtaining money under false pretenses.

Complaint was made to the police that a man who said he was Crane Wilbur was offering positions with a cinema company to aspirants at a salary of $8 a day. After getting in their good graces he is asserted to have borrowed money from them.

When Gross was taken into custody today by Sergt. Ben. Corrillo, a letter addressed to Crane Wilbur was found in his possession.

HUSBAND CONCEALS SHOOTING

Long Beach Police Try to Learn Why Man Kept Quiet About Wife's Injury

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, Sept. 23.—Long Beach police today were attempting to clear the mystery surrounding the failure of J. M. Maris, a chauffeur, to report to the authorities, following the shooting of his wife, Mrs. Mary Maris, 23 years old, before daylight this morning. Mrs. Maris, now in a critical condition at Seaside Hospital, with a bullet in her side, was shot accidentally, according to Special Officer Joe Davis, when in endeavoring to stop Maris in a Ford car, he was thrown from the running board to the pavement. As he fell he said his gun was discharged. The bullet, it developed later, after passing through the front seat of the car, entered Mrs. Maris's side.

The car sped on, the special patrolman said, and he was not aware that the accidentally fired bullet had injured anyone, until after the police had been notified by Dr. Thomas H. Barlow, that he had been called to attend Mrs. Maris at her home for a gunshot wound. Special Officer Davis says he stopped Maris after he had seen him come from an alley in the rear of a garage, carrying a tonneau windshield in his hands.

Brought to the police station and questioned by Chief of Police McLendon, Maris declined to make an explanation, declaring that he will talk "when the proper time comes." He was not held. Special Officer Davis gained considerable prominence here last spring when entering a private home he encountered two burglars and shot them both.

PADDOCK PINCHED FOR SPEED

King of Cinder Path is Nabbed for Stepping Too Fast in an Automobile

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA MONICA, Sept. 23.—Charles W. Paddock, the Pasadena speed demon, can shake a wicked leg on the cinder path and he's no slouch as far as speed is concerned when he's driving an automobile, but he is looked down upon by the Santa Monica police, for hiding his identity.

A week ago, yesterday, Motorcycle Officer Bray caught a man traveling thirty-nine males an hour over the Fifteenth-street crossing on Pico Boulevard. He haled him to the local bastille, where he gave the name of C. W. Paddock, age 22 years, occupation a cerk. So far, so good.

Tday Mr. C. W. Paddock was scheduled to appear before Judge King and plead to the charge. Just before the case was called a Pasadena judge telephoned Judge King and asked that the case be continued one week.

A reporter was standing nearby and he requested the judge to ascertain just who Mr. C. W. Paddock was. He found out. It was no other than the famous sprinter and he is due for a spurt to Santa Monica next Friday to explain why he can't keep his speedy feet off the foot throttle, while crossing street intersections.

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL TO BE STUDIED

New Association to Have Public Meetings and Make Researches

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PASADENA, Sept. 23.—The Alcohol Education Association, recently launched, with headquarters here, announced today the completion of its organization and the first of a series of public greetings which are to be held in various points of Southern California. The first meeting will be at the Maryland here next Thursday evening.

Dr. John Willis Baer has been selected as treasurer. Other officers are Richmond P. Hobson, president, Montaville Flowers, general secretary, and H. R. Bonner, director of educational research. Dr. David Starr Jordan heads the department of scientific research.

A European department of scientific research has been formed, it was announced. Dr. Robert Hercod of Lausanne, Switzerland, heads it and Dr. Ley of the University of Brussels heads the European advisory committee on research. Chairs of research in the effects of alcohol on the human system will be established, it is said, at Stanford University, at Lausanne and at Tokio.

Speakers at the first meeting will be President Hobson, Mr. Flowers and Mr. Bonner. They will outline the work the association expects to accomplish and tell what has already been done.

Impressive Industrial Advance in City of Orange; to Add Cotton Mill to Big Wire Plant

The city of Orange is making industrial history for Southern California and now proposes an innovation that will likely be the cause of considerable unique publicity by erecting a cotton-spinning mill right in the middle of an orange grove upon which the city has encroached in its building expansion. A cotton mill in an orange grove! It intrigues the imagination and gives a flavor of romance to manufacturing which only Southern California is capable of inspiring and actually installing.

[illegible] than that, it is to be built [illegible] operated by Orange capital; [illegible] further, the entire production of the cotton mill is to be [illegible] by another Orange plant in [illegible] insulation of electric wires and [illegible] and again, it is an illustration of what may be expected [illegible] way of industrial investment [illegible] of citrus profits, with the [illegible] wealth of the citrus and [illegible] ranchers south of the Te[illegible] turning the entire region [illegible] producing center unlike any [illegible] the world in its scenic, [illegible] and industrial com[illegible]

FACT AND COMMENT

Building improvements in an industrial district, the building of factory buildings, have the same relative influence on increase in value of the land as do building improvements in a residential section. The character of the buildings and the nature of the plant also are reflected in this enhancement or recession of values, just as surely as the character of a residential district is so reflected.

For this reason it is of considerable importance that there should be no further delay in properly and clearly defining the metes and bounds of this city's industrial zones; then giving them the stability of legal enactment and thereafter strictly adhering to them. The present laxity regarding industrial zoning and the vacillations under personal or political pressure are not conducive to orderly progress; and, while they may not prevent the city from attaining its manifest destiny, they are the cause of much irritation, by reason of their indefiniteness.

The Chamber of Commerce cites a recent instance wherein a property owner in a district which had for eight years been recognized as industrial had plans drawn for a factory, received his building permit, and then, under local pressure, the Council passed an ordinance taking the property out of the industrial zone. After much trouble to the Chamber of Commerce, and expense as well as irritation to the taxpayer, the property was again reinstated in the industrial zone, with no assurance of permanency, and with nothing to prevent the Council from again changing its mind over night.

Another similar case is cited by the Chamber of Commerce wherein an acreage tract, in a district or zone recognized as industrial, was bought by an eastern manufac-

MILLIONS FOR NEW BUILDINGS

Plans for Two Apartment Houses Completed

Salvation Army Starts Work on Big Hotel

To Erect Public Market and Studio Addition

Architectural plans for the fine apartment building to be erected at the southeast corner of Wilshire Boulevard and Berendo Place, on the property now occupied by the home of Earl C. Anthony, have been completed and the contract for the removal of the Anthony home has been awarded to the Kress House Moving Company. The residence, together with the trees and planting, will be moved to property purchased by Mr. Anthony in the Hollywood foothill district, north of Los Feliz Boulevard.

The apartment-house is to be erected by A. C. Blumenthal and associates of San Francisco. It will be a twelve-story Class A structure, and will be one of the most modern of its kind in the West. The site has a frontage of 145 feet on Wilshire Boulevard, with a depth of 175 feet on Berendo street.

The building, it is estimated, will cost approximately $1,000,000. In design, it will follow the latest type of New York apartment houses, with apartments ranging in size from five to ten rooms. Plans were prepared by architect G. Albert Lansburgh, in association with local architects. From ten to twelve months, it is estimated, will be required to erect the structure.

CO-OPERATIVE APARTMENTS

Plans have also been prepared by architect Edward Cray Taylor and engineer Ellis Wing Taylor for a ten-story fireproof co-operative apartment-house at Wilshire Boulevard and Shatto Place. The building, to be known as Wilshire Dwellings, will contain seventy-nine apartments, with large rooms, electric elevators, steam heat, refrigerating plant and incinerator. Plans for the structure, which, it is said, will be financed by eastern capital, call for an expenditure of about $700,000.

Arrangements for the construction of the building and the sale of the apartments are in the hands of E. A. Wayt. The Title Insurance and Trust Company will act as trustee for the project.

FOR FILM STUDIO

Prosperity among the established motion-picture studios is indicated by the decision during the past week of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., to erect a new administration building on its property bounded by Commonwealth avenue, Sunset Drive and Fleming street in Hollywood. The structure, which will be of ornate Spanish type, will extend 200 feet on Sunset and 100 feet on Commonwealth.

This is to be the first unit of a continuous series of buildings encircling the Ray property, of a consistent style of architecture, as fast as the exigencies of picture-production will permit. This company, under Charles Ray's new alliance with United Artists, consisting of Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith and Charles Chaplin, has extensive plans ahead, and structural improvements and additions planned look forward to one of the most complete and decorative studios in the country.

The unit about to go up will be built by the Nance Construction Company, which has done important work in the physical development of other studios. The design is from the architectural department of the Nance Company.

Architect Edwin Bergstrom has completed plans and working drawings for the Young Women's Residence, a class C structure to cost about $250,000, and to be built by

Big Apartment House Leased to Hotel Men

The Alvarado Apartments, together with the furnishings, at the corner of Ninth and Alvarado streets, have been leased by the Pacific Southwest Trust and Savings Bank, representing the Grogan estate, to the Los Angeles Hotel Company for a total consideration reported at $500,000. The Alvarado, one of the best apartment houses in the city, contains 225 rooms.

The Los Angeles Hotel Company operates, in addition to the Alvarado Apartments, the Oviatt Hotel, the Wagner Hotel, and the Russell Hotel in Minneapolis. The company, plans, in the near future, to erect a 200-room fireproof hotel at the southeast corner of Ninth street and Westlake avenue, the property having recently been acquired for this purpose.

NIGHT FREIGHT SERVICE

San Pedro Street to Become Trade Artery by $100,000 Improvement

Filing with the city yesterday morning of an application for extension of franchise to the Pacific Electric for operation of freight service on the municipally owned tracks on San Pedro street, is the culmination of plans and negotiations which for a year have been under consideration by the Chamber of Commerce, the railroad and the city departments, having as their object the creation of a close-in wholesale, jobbing and light manufacturing district, which would afford this city freight advantages at least approximating those enjoyed by the wholesale districts of San Francisco.

The question arose about a year ago, when the Westinghouse Company was negotiating for its site and building at San Pedro and Fifth streets, for which direct freight connections were considered necessary. Negotiations at that time resulted in assurances that all interests were favorably disposed toward this improvement and the Westinghouse Company proceeded with the building.

TO WIDEN CORNERS

Being now completed and ready for occupancy, freight connections are required without delay, and the application for franchise is made in order to guarantee permanence of operation sufficient to warrant the expenditure of approximately $100,000 by the railroad company in widening San Pedro corners sufficiently to permit the passage of freight cars.

This will involve the condemnation by the city of the southeast corner of Aliso and San Pedro and of the northeast corner of Ninth and San Pedro streets. Thereupon the Pacific Electric will increase the radius of the turns at these intersections to permit the operation of freight cars, and will establish freight service for the entire street from Aliso to Ninth.

The franchise asks for a term of twenty-one years, and reserves to the city its rights in the trackage, either for its own use or for other freight carriers, and leaves other terms of payment as under the existing contract, also putting the entire expense of the improvement upon the railroad company, and limiting operation of freight cars or trains to the hours between 7 p.m. and 7 a.m.

IS FAVORED

The State Railroad Commission has already passed favorably on the operation of night freight service; the property owners have volunteered to pay a portion of the total expense; the City Council and Board of Public Utilities have indicated their favorable attitude, and the Chamber of Commerce officials declare that this improvement is one of the most important and far-reaching in its effect on wholesale and industrial development, which that body has under consideration, according to Assistant Secretary A. G. Arnoll, who is the factotum during Frank Wiggins's vacation in the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. Arnoll elaborated the chamber's views as follows:

"In the minds of those who have been studying the growth of Los Angeles, one of the greatest problems has been the development of certain sections of the city, which, while ideally located as regards their nearness to the center of business, have been without facilities to make them even acceptable to any class of industry.

"The big section lying along San Pedro street and that general vicinity has been the subject of much concern to the officials of the Chamber of Commerce, as many were known to be desirous of locating in that general section, because of its accessibility, but were unable to consider it due to lack of transportation facilities.

LONG DESIRED

"This condition has had to be faced by every large city and Los Angeles has been at a distinct disadvantage with some of the other Pacific Coast cities, notably San Francisco, in respect to transportation facilities for its close-in industries.

"It is expected and hoped that the movement initiated by the Pacific Electric Company, after a long series of conferences between the officials of the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Public Utilities of the city of Los Angeles and the Railroad Commission of the State of California, will result in great benefit to Los Angeles generally.

"Capt. John D. Fredericks, president of the Chamber of Commerce, has devoted considerable of his personal time to this matter and it was only through the efforts of the Chamber of Commerce and the city officials that it was possible to get the Westinghouse Company to locate its big building on San Pedro street and thus make the first move in what is hoped to be a series of big developments in this general section, which has lain dormant for a number of years."

Apartments and Stores Rise on North Vermont

Construction work is well under way on a modern store and apartment building which is being erected at the northeast corner of Vermont and Melbourne avenues, two blocks north of Hollywood Boulevard, by John Luckenback. The building of semifireproof construction, has a frontage of 108 feet on Vermont avenue.

The ground floor is devoted to stores, while the second and third floors will contain eighteen apartments. The building will be equipped with an automatic elevator, incinerator, hot water system, and private telephones from the lobby to each apartment. The bathrooms throughout are to be finished in tile, and a number of built-in features will be incorporated in the apartments.

On each of the upper floors there is a corner office suite, designed especially for doctors and dentists. The entrance lobby will be finished in tile and mahogany. The structure, when completed, will represent an investment of approximately $125,000. Mr. Luckenback is also the owner of the southeast corner of Vermont and Melbourne avenues, and he plans substantial improvements on this corner in the near future.

Realty Brokers of Honolulu Organize, Says Message From President Tatum

Word was received by wireless yesterday that C. C. Tatum, president of the California Real Estate Association, has organized a realty board in Honolulu, the first to be organized in any of the insular possessions of the United States. The new Honolulu board will be affiliated with the National Association of Realty Boards. Mr. Tatum is visiting the Hawaiian Islands with the party of Los Angeles people which sailed on the maiden voyage of the City of Los Angeles.

The Honolulu Realty Board holds the distinction of being the farthest west organization of the kind. Since he assumed office, Mr. Tatum has visited fifty-three realty boards in California, and he has been instrumental in the organization of thirty new boards.

MAKING READY TO HANDLE BIG CROWDS

Construction of a dozen tract offices, provision of parking space for hundreds of cars, and removal of old houses and trees marked the activities of the week at Goodyear Park, now being prepared by the De Witt-Blair Realty Company, owners.

Goodyear Park is located five blocks east of Main street, on Slauson avenue. Two blocks away, on a thirty-acre site along Florence avenue, a public school is scheduled to be built and ready for service in September next year. It will include both high and grammar grades.

Central avenue is now being widened along the tract to a 100-foot boulevard and, connecting with Florence avenue, will furnish a new highway between Long Beach and the city, relieving Slauson avenue congestion.

MINES OF MEXICO ARE RESUMING OPERATIONS

Higher Metal Prices Stimulate Production; Extravagance of Government Condemned

BY W. D. HORNADAY
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

[This is the fourth of a series of articles on commercial, banking and industrial conditions in Mexico. Mr. Hornaday, a veteran in writing Mexican news, is obtaining data on a trip to Mexico City and other parts of the republic.]

MEXICO CITY (Mex.) Sept. 23.—There is one bright spot in the economic situation of Mexico, and that is the revival of mining operations in various parts of the country. The increase in the price of copper, silver and lead is stimulating the production of ores and bringing about the reopening of many mines that have been long closed. As a result of this mineral development Mexican laborers are flocking in great numbers from the farms and oil fields to the mining districts. During the first six months of the present calendar year there was a total production of precious metals in Mexico valued at $20,000,000 as compared with $17,000,000 for the corresponding period of 1931.

The best barometer of changed business conditions in Mexico is export and import figures. These show that eliminating the $19,000,000 increase in the value of petroleum exports for the first six months of 1922 over that of the first six months of last year, the imports show an enormous and growing increase, exact figures, however, not being as yet available.

Canned goods from the United States have taken the place of fresh native farm products. This is not only true in the larger cities but in the smaller towns. American cereal breakfast foods have suddenly come into enormous demand throughout the country. No longer is Mexico living at home. People are importing their foodstuffs, not as luxuries, but as necessities. The slowing up of manufacturing of textiles and other native goods and articles is causing the importation of these things to take their place.

HOPE LIES IN EDUCATION

In further answer to the optimistic assertions of persons who declare that Mexico is capable of living within itself, it is pointed out that this could be done perhaps if the people would work, but conditions as they exist at present are said to be ample proof that without the stimulating influence of American or other foreign interests or investors back of them the masses of people of the country will not put forth the necessary effort to make Mexico self-supporting. It is asserted that there will be brought about a change in this respect when, by means of education the illiteracy of the millions of the lower class of the population has been removed.

It is expected also that with education there will have been created initiative on the part of the Mexican people—business and industrial initiative. Up to this time they have given little evidence of this characteristic which is so necessary to bring about the exploitation of the vast resources that abound everywhere. In proof of this it is pointed out that the native people and capital had every opportunity to share to the fullest extent in the development of the oil resources of the Tampico region but that in only a very few cases have they entered into this industry.

Another criticism that is heard on all sides among Mexicans and foreigners who are engaged in business is that some of the officials who are prominently connected with the Obregon government go in too much for display, that they seek to create an impression of prosperity with other nations by the reckless expenditure of money. As an illustration of this tendency on the part of the government it is stated that an appropriation of 900,000 pesos, equivalent to $450,000 United States currency, was made out of the Federal treasury to pay the cost of the government commission, headed by Jose Vasconcelos, Minister of Education, on their present visit to Brazil as representatives of the Mexican government at the Centennial celebration in Rio de Janiero. In addition to this sum Mrs. Vasconcelos was given 75,000 pesos with which to outfit herself for the visit to Brazil's social officialdom.

GOVERNMENT LACKS FUNDS

The government is charged with spending money as fast as it receives it, and that notwithstanding these expenditures it is running behind in the payment of its employees. During the week following his return from his conference in New York with the International bankers Adolfo de la Huerta, minister of finance, scoured the banks of Mexico City for a loan of 1,000,000 pesos with which to pay overdue salaries of government workers. He was unable to obtain the loan. Payment of the employees of the National Railways of Mexico is also running behind.

At this time a year ago Mexico was overrun with prospective American investors. The hotels in the capitals were crowded with representatives of large foreign financial interests who were seeking investments of various kinds. Practically all of these forerunners of development have left the country. When they were here recognition of Mexico by the United States was momentarily expected. It is now a hope long deferred.

Notwithstanding the general pessimistic feeling that exists here belief prevails that the economic problem of the government and the country will in time be solved. As an evidence of this faith in the future the authoritative announcement is made that the American Smelting and Refining Company has just concluded a transaction for the purchase of an enormous coal field near Rosita, state of Coahuila, for a consideration of $7,000,000 United States money and that this company has adopted plans for the construction of coke ovens and the installation of mining equipment, including the building of industrial railroads at an additional cost of $20,000,000. It is stated that the company is amply protected in its new investment. The American Smelting and Refining Company owns smelters at Chihuahua, Velardena, Aguas Caliente, Matehuala and Monterey.

IRON MOUNTAIN SOLD

It is also stated that the Monterey Iron and Steel Company in which American interests are said to own one-third, the French one-third, and Mexicans one-third of the $10,000,000 capital of the concern, has just purchased the famous Iron Mountain near Durango, which is one of the largest deposits of iron ore upon the continent. There have been other recent investments of American capital in mines. Although there is much heard of German investments in Mexico there is no tangible evidence that any great amount of German capital has been put into this country since the war. British and French capital is also holding aloof, pending a betterment of economic conditions here, it is explained.

MONTEREY (Mex.) Sept. 23.—An American firm, James F. Martin & Co., of Tampico, has been awarded the contract for paving approximately twenty-eight miles of streets of this city, and for hard-surfacing the highway between Monterey and Santa Catarina, twelve miles. The total cost of the work will be about $1,750,000 United States currency, it is stated. The contract involves the laying of five classes of paving material. It is the most important municipal contract let by any city in Mexico since the revolutionary period began, twelve years ago.

TRACT TO BE OPENED TODAY

First Unit of Goodyear Park on Market

Sixteen Hundred Lots Will be Available

Big Development Planned for District

Goodyear Park, the huge tract of the DeWitt-Blair Realty Company, although not yet fully ready, according to Mr. Blair, will be thrown open for reservations today. The first unit to go on the market, comprising 1600 lots, is said to be the largest number of sites ever thrown on the market simultaneously in the city.

This tract sale is being featured by the giving away of a completed $5000 home, and a small army of salesmen has been recruited to care for those who, today, are expected to flock there to register.

Goodyear Park is bounded roughly by Compton avenue on the east, Slauson avenue on the north, Central avenue on the west and Florence on the south. The last three streets are all scheduled to become 100-foot main traffic arteries.

Adjacent to this property are three pay-roll districts, said to employ over 30,000 workers. They are Vernon to the northeast, the Slauson-Alameda district to the north and the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company across Central avenue.

Surrounding the Goodyear property to the west, north and south are 530 acres to be transformed, according to the plans of W. H. Daum, into a great electrically operated industrial district.

This acreage will in the near future, according to Mr. Daum, be equipped with service railroad tracks, totaling in all twenty miles. It will hold, he estimates, 150 factories, and recently Assistant Secretary Arnoll of the Chamber of Commerce declared more than that number of industries are on the verge of coming to Los Angeles.

Another activity of note near Goodyear Park is the recent purchase by the Board of Education of thirty acres at Florence avenue and Seventy-eighth street. Upon this site will be erected a public school containing both high and grammar departments to cost $1,500,000. It is to be ready for occupancy, according to present board plans, by September 1 of next year.

Goodyear Park is served by two 5-cent car lines, the San Pedro street and Central avenue cars, the former car going to the center of the tract. Along Central avenue from the north business has extended up to the Goodyear Park tract, where stopped by this large area of land held out of use, it turned eastward along Slauson, practically all the way to Huntington Park. Central avenue extends for almost two miles along Goodyear Park and the Dewitt-Blair Realty Company has reserved the entire frontage for business purposes.

New Theater to be Opened in October

On Wednesday evening, October 18, Grauman's new Hollywood theater, erected at a cost of $800,000 will be formally dedicated. For the opening of the new house, Robin Hood, with Douglas Fairbanks has been secured. The theater, which has been in course of construction for several months, is located at Hollywood Boulevard and McCadden Place, with frontage on both streets.

In design it is one of the most unique structures of its kind in the country. The building is of pure Egyptian architecture, being built of massive blocks of concrete. Four huge columns, four and a half feet in diameter and rising to a height of twenty feet, form the main entrance to the foyer. The main auditorium, with a seating capacity for 2000 people, is 115 by 125 feet, and the stake is 30 by 75 feet.

The interior decoration conforms with the architecture of the building, Egyptian motifs of the Sphinx, pyramids, hieroglyphics and inscription being employed. Arrangements have been made by Mr. Grauman for the presentation of large prologues on the stage, which has been designed and equipped with this purpose in view.

AUSTRALIA WANTS OUR TRADE

In the interest of better trade relations between Australia and the United States, particularly the Pacific Coast, Frank Laurie, managing director of the Associated Press of Australia, is making a world lecture tour, addressing commercial organizations and foreign traders.

There is an inexhaustible field for new industries of every kind in Australia and New Zealand, Mr. Laurie declared in an article recently published in San Francisco Business, and there is a great opportunity to develop a profitable import and export trade with oversea nations. The Pacific Coast, he said, is the natural center for this trade. In the past, he pointed out, Australia and New Zealand have been hampered in the disposition of their raw materials by lack of shipping facilities, but importers and exporters are now directing their attention to the development of international trade.

THREE COURSES TO BE OFFERED

Lectures on Realty Subjects to be Resumed

Prominent Local Men Will Act as Instructors

Advanced Classes Will be Held This Year

When the University of Southern California opens this week three courses in real estate instruction will start in the class rooms of the College of Commerce and Business Administration adjoining the offices of the Los Angeles Realty Board in the Realty Board Building at 631 South Spring street. Frank Ryan, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board, will give the introductory lecture before the first class in the course, which is similar to the most successful series of lectures given during the twelve weeks' term last spring.

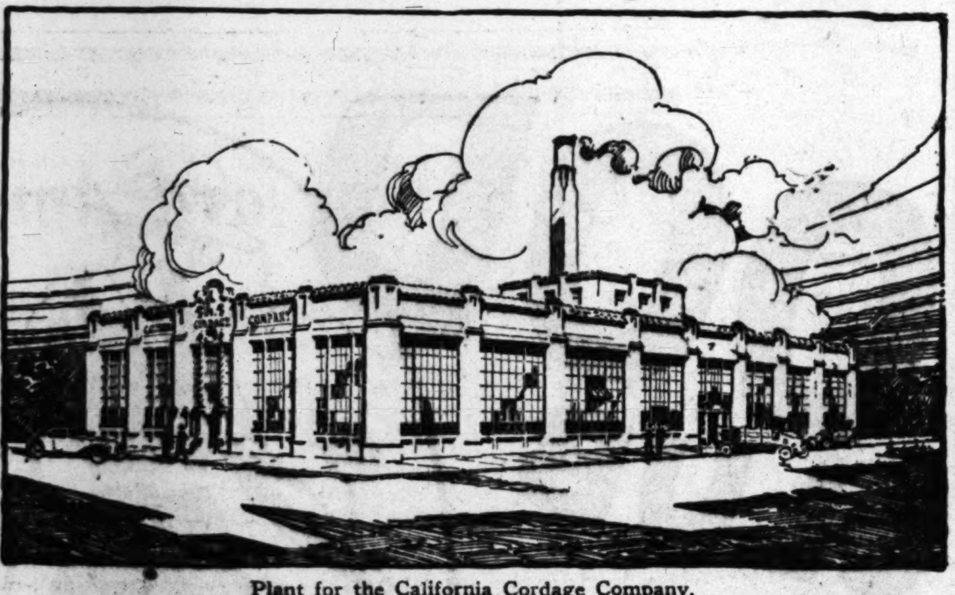
The second lecture of the series will be given by W. Ross Campbell, also a member of the Los Angeles Realty Board who will speak October 2 on "Prospects." Additional lectures by realty board members and their subjects follow: Richard C. Willis, "Leases;" W. H. Daum, "Industrial Property;" Harold Janss, "Subdivisions;" and W. B. Stringfellow, "Mortgages."

Others who will appear during the twelve weeks before the class and their subjects/are: G. Gordon Whitnall, secretary-consultant, City Planning Commission, "City Planning and Zoning;" Ed Hopkins, county assessor, "Taxation Assessments;" Burdette Moody, business agent of the Bureau of Power and Light of the City of Los Angeles, "Water Power as a Means of Growth;" F. J. Armstrong, "Salesmanship;" Roy V. Rhodes, "Contracts;" Shirley Ward, "Law of Movements in City Values;" L. H. Rosebarry, vice-president of the Security Trust and Savings Bank, "Notes and Mortgages," and Newton Thompson, title officer of the Title Insurance and Trust Company, "Abstract and Titles."

D. Parker Bryon, associated with the Charles G. Andrews company, another member of the Los Angeles Realty Board will have charge of the advanced class on Real Estate Methods which will take up the mathematics of realty, law of movements in city values, insurance, brokerage, negotiations, care of estates, real estate trust, listing, negotiating mortgages, liens, Torrens System and other like subjects. This course will be a practical exposition of real estate principles designed for men and women now engaged in real estate business and also for students who took the elementary course last year and who wish to continue their studies, according to Mr. Bryon. The first real estate course attempted by the university was started last year with Mr. Bryon in charge.

The third course—on "Real Estate Law"—will be in charge of Oliver J. Marston, a practicing attorney. It will enter into an exhaustive study and analysis of the statutes governing the transfer of real property, according to Mr. Marston.

Industrial Plant to Rise on Orange Grove Site



Plant for the California Cordage Company,

Soon to be erected for the manufacture of cotton insulation material for electric wires.

REALTY OFFICE WILL BE OPEN EVENINGS

The Cook, Woodley & Thompson Company, the owners and subdividers of Los Feliz Heights, announces that hereafter its office at the corner of Los Feliz Boulevard and Vermont avenue will be open evenings until 9 o'clock. The company has had so many requests for interviews in the evening that this action has become necessary. Many thousands of dollars' worth of sales to parties who have "dropped in" during the last two weeks after business hours are reported.

With the vacation period over, indications point to an increased inquiry on the part of prospective purchasers and it is the firm's desire to afford visitors every facility possible in acquiring information in regard to Los Feliz Heights.

NEW FACTORY FOR ORANGE

It is the purpose to begin building in October; to complete the building by next January and to have the cotton mill in operation by next February. Officers and directors of the cotton mill will be the same as those of the wire mill. They are Louis Koth, president; F. W. Struck, vice-president; Fred A. Grote, secretary-treasurer; Fred H. Alden, sales manager, and William Klug and W. C. Mathiasto complete the board.

For superintendent of the cotton mill Lee S. Sossoman has been drafted from one of the largest cotton mills in Georgia, after twenty-five years at the production end of cotton mnaufacture. About fifty people will be employed at the start, by just so much increasing the distribution of funds in Orange.

NEED SMELTER

Louis Koth, the president and active superintendent of the wire mill, who came here from Illinois only a few years ago, expresses himself as favoring the immediate erection in Los Angeles of a copper smelter and wire-drawing plant, and says that it will be done eventually by his own organizations if not by outside interests, because the business and demand are growing at a rate incompatible with dependence on eastern supply of copper wire and cables.

Although the wires, rods and cables are made at the Anaconda works in Great Falls, Mont., the freight from that point to Los Angeles is so much more than the freight across the continent and back again, that the ore can be shipped East, be there smelted, drawn into wire and twisted into cables and shipped back to the Pacific Coast, for less than it can be made at the mines and shipped direct to Los Angeles.

With smelter, rod and wire mills here, Mr. Koth insists, the entire western supply could be manufactured at this point for all hydro-electric developments and electrical uses, and could get the business because the East could then be undersold and as efficient service rendered copper users as is now enjoyed by those in the East.

BRIGHT FUTURE

The wire mill has contracts with the city of Los Angeles and Tacoma, and has opened a warehouse and office in San Francisco, in view of the increased production to become available when the wire mill extension more than doubles the present ouput.

Within five years, Mr. Koth predicts, there will be in Orange a self-sustained copper wire and cable industry comprising drawing mills, twisting mills, insulating mills, mills for the production of electrical wires and cables and other copper commodities; and he avers that it is not unlikely in the event no independent smelter is operated at the port, that his own organization will find it advisable to add such a plant to the group of buildings at Orange; which would make that city the copper headquarters for the entire Pacific Coast.

As illustrative of Southern California industrial opportunities, Mr. Koth cites the eight months' history of the industry at Orange. It started only last January with a small mill and $100,000 capital. In four months the capital was doubled and a big new factory building erected. In another four months another factory was started to supply the cotton twines and yarns now coming from the cotton mills of Georgia. The demand for the product exceeds the capacity of the mills, again, and extensions will become necessary. Climatic and labor conditions enable it to compete with eastern concerns even in the face of the freight handicap. It extends the Los Angeles metropolitan district forty miles to the southeast, as well as to the harbor and Long Beach and foreshadows the encirclement of Los Angeles, like New York, Chicago, and other industrial centers, with industrial towns in an endless chain from the mountains to the sea, where intensive manufacturing will parallel intensive farming and orcharding under living conditions nowhere else obtainable.

HOTEL BUILDING

Architect Carl Boller has completed plans for a four-story class C brick hotel building to be erected at the northeast corner of Cambria street and Union avenue for Roy Cummings. It will contain seventy rooms, with bath, and will cost about $50,000.

NEW HOSPITAL

John J. Frauenfelder, architect, has prepared plans for a class A hospital building to be erected on Glendale Boulevard at Waverly avenue for the Merrill Corporation. It will be three stories in height, and will cost about $65,000.

PLAN BIGGER CARNIVAL

The recent water sports carnival held at Alamitos Bay on Admission Day under the sanction of the A.A.U. sponsored by the Belmont Shore Athletic Club was such a success from the standpoint of the Southern Branch of the A.A.U., of which Bob Weaver is president, that he notified Capt. Owen R. Bird, advertising director who promoted the meet, to the effect that every effort would be made to secure the International Open Water championships on the same course next year.

Capt. Bird is credited with the popularity of the first water sport carnival held at this bay. More than 3000 spectators crowded the banks of both sides of the channel where the course was laid out for the swimming, diving and acquaplaning events. In the event that the next meet is held on the Belmont Shore Place course, a permanent thirty-foot diving platform will be erected in place of the semipermanent ten-foot springboard which was used in the Admission Day contest.

If permission can be granted to secure entries from the Pacific Fleet this program should prove to be decidedly unique from every standpoint. McGrath and Selover selling agents of the Belmont Shore Place tract have enjoyed a splendid return from the large crowd of spectators who gathered at the tract on the day of the water carnival.

Although the regular excursion was suspended on that day, many persons who otherwise would never have taken the time to investigate the property, became interested.

Do This

Drive out Glendale Boulevard to just the side of Glendale—on the other side of the bridge—and into Garden Avenue, where you will see seven houses and double bungalow building in the block.

Examine the double bungalows and consider this: You can buy one of them for $8750—about a third down—and pay for it the same as if you were paying $50 a month rent.

You rent one side for $50 and pay for yourself. Then when the property is paid for you will have an income from the other side besides your own rent free.

The street will soon be built solid, with the mountain and wooded hill on all sides and the flowers and grass that the wonderful soil will grow, it will be a dream spot. Glendale car—18 minutes from Broadway.

FINE SCHOOL IS OCCUPIED

Lindsay Union High Will be Used This Year

Considered One of Finest of Kind in Valley

Facilities for All Branches of Work Provided

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

LINDSAY, Sept. 23.—Situated at the foot of the snow-capped Sierras, Lindsay's new $250,000 Union High School, gymnasium and manual art shop, is considered one of the most up-to-date plants in the valley, and to the students of this term goes the honor of being the first to study within its walls. The popular unit plan is used in construction and aside from being a progressive step in the history of Lindsay, the new union high school is also a most pleasing contribution to attractions of the city.

Entering from the main entrance, the reception-room is to the south, with the office adjoining. A small room for supplies connects with the office. On the north side of the main entrance corridor is a reception-room for teachers, with cloakrooms and other facilities.

The auditorium, or main room, has a seating capacity of 700. It is provided with a stage for student dramatics, an orchestra pit and a Steinway grand piano. Two standard motion-picture machines are placed in the balcony. Attractive hangings and interior decoration contribute to the harmony and pleasing effect.

A large, well-lighted library, a study hall—which will also be used by the student body for meetings; eleven classrooms with average seating capacity of thirty-five, and well cabineted to suit needs of the various departments, are also included in the main building.

The science department occupies the south end of the second floor. The lecture room is conveniently accessible from each of the laboratories. One room will be used for biology and general science, one for chemistry and one for physics. Separating each is a supply-room. A darkroom also is provided.

Free-hand drawing and mechanical drawing will occupy one classroom which contains lockers for drawings, cabinets for free-hand objects and a convenient place for drawing-boards. The commercial department will occupy two rooms on the second floor, built-in trophy cases are features in the corridor on the first floor. Lockers for student property will be placed in an alcove opening off the first-floor passageway.

Workrooms to be occupied by the manual training and mechanical art departments are particularly complete and were highly complimented by State and university inspectors. Bench room allows of a number of pupils and the pit is large enough for four machines at the same time. Auto and tractor repair work will be a feature of this department as will forge, sheet metal and general repair work. A toolroom is conveniently arranged.

Storage for lumber is provided in the room for woodwork and a dust-proof room is provided for the varnishing work. While yet incomplete in equipment, the gymnasium will provide excellent facilities for all kinds of physical education, and will be one of the real attractions of the new plant. An automatic gas water heater will keep water at a comfortable temperature. Ample lockers and shower baths have been provided.

BIG DELEGATION COMING

Forty-three definite reservations had been made last week by San Francisco realtors for the trip to the Los Angeles Realty Board's second annual Hi Jinks at Catalina Island October 20, 21 and 22, according to word received by President Frank Ryan from the "Jinks interest" committee in the San Francisco Real Estate Board. This record, made a month in advance of the jollification, indicates that at least 100 of the Bay City members intend to be guests and it is believed here that a special train from the north is practically assured.

Members of the Los Angeles Realty Board have been making additional reservations to Secretary Tom Ingersoll daily this past week as the Hi Jinks propaganda has been diligently spread among the membership by the committees having the big entertainment project in charge. The total number of reservations, accompanied by checks, is almost double that which members of the Hi Jinks committee expected at this time.

Preparations are being made to mail another large poster similar to the flaming opening announcement which proved so effective in arousing preliminary interest. It will be prepared this week for distribution. The first "broadside" of the local realtors also attracted attention in San Francisco and the "Jinks interest" committee there wired for 150 extra copies to be used in the Bay City to show the Los Angeles publicity methods.

From San Francisco also comes word that a special "stunts committee" is being organized by the Bay City realtors and a special period of the program is to be given over to the visitors. Their entertainment plans are said to be just as mysterious as the program being arranged by the local committee.

DESK COMPANY LEASES BUILDING ON SPRING

The Los Angeles Desk Company has made a long-term ground lease on the property at 741 North Spring street running through to 742 New High street from Howard Buttress of Buttress & McClellan. The desk company has bought the building, which covers the entire lot, and will make suitable alterations and use it for a warehouse for its fast growing office furniture business. Ralph T. Merchant of H. L. Suydam's business property agency was the broker for both parties.

WOULD BE BIG AID TO BUSINESS

McNary-Smith Bill Will Create Market for Many Commodities

In connection with the "McNary-Smith Bill," providing for the reclamation of arid, swamped and overflowed lands, suitable for agriculture, which is now before Congress, the Union Pacific System has prepared a table showing the number of carloads of freight, exclusive of merchandise, which were received at stations under various irrigation projects in the northwest during the year 1920. This gives the astonishing total of 18,975 carloads shipped into five of these comparatively small districts, which gives an idea of the exceptional buying power which will be created if the "McNary-Smith Bill" is passed and additional reclamation projects are established.

Of the total number of carloads given on this table, 524 came from the State of California. A large number of staple products and luxuries are given on the statement, showing that the people who live in these reclamation districts are good spenders.

The main idea behind the McNary-Smith bill is that the government should advance money enough to carry on the reclamation work, but this money is to be repaid over a stated period of time at a rate of interest not in excess of 5 per cent per annum. The "McNary-Smith Bill" if enacted into law, will not only reclaim arid wastes, but millions of acres of swamps and overflowed land distributed throughout the United States. In doing this it will contribute a great deal of benefit to all the States in the Union by creating new markets for goods of every description.

The Union Pacific System, the Western States Reclamation Association and other interests favoring this bill are urging the public to write to their Congressmen, asking them to vote for the "McNary-Smith Bill."

Fine Home is Exchanged for Oil Property

The exchange of the Sterling residence, at Smiley Heights, near Redlands, for property in the Yorba Linda field was announced yesterday by Edwin R. Knox, local realty broker. The Sterling property, considered one of the show places of Southern California, comprises twenty-seven and one-half acres, together with a fine Italian residence of seventeen rooms. Twenty-five acres are planted to orange trees, while two and one-half acres of the estate are improved with Italian and Japanese gardens.

The deal involved a total consideration of $200,000. Shortly after the death of Mr. Sterling, the property was acquired by L. W. Neiswender, local capitalist and realty broker. Through the deal just closed Mr. Neiswender has exchanged the property for the Yorba Linda grove with Dr. Paul Bauer. Mr. Neiswender was represented in the deal by Mr. Knox, while Mr. Soloman represented Dr. Bauer.

YOUR Vineyard Among "The Vineyards of Delano"

THE Southern California Development Corporation makes it possible for you to own a vineyard in Southern California—one in the heart of the raisin belt, among "The Vineyards of Delano."

The Southern California Development Corporation makes it possible for you, in owning a Delano vineyard, to enjoy an assured income—an income giving you unbounded comfort—AN INCOME FOR LIFE.

Mother Earth yields bounteously for man, enriching him in many ways, and in none is she more lavish than in the production of the grape, which brings him a golden return.

In Southern California, and especially in the southern part of the San Joaquin Valley, are vineyards which produce a golden harvest year after year. They are unfailingly dependable and their luscious product, which is converted into delicious raisins, is sent into the markets of the two hemispheres bringing millions yearly to the growers.

One can only inadequately describe The Vineyards of Delano, where, with an exceptionally rich soil of great depth, the grapes mature earlier and in such profusion as to excite the wonderment of even old-time viticulturists.

To give you an opportunity to share in the wonderful vineyards of Delano—"Gem of the Sun Maid district"—the Southern California Development Corporation offers units of ten acres each. The Corporation, which takes half of the crops for half of the purchase price, plants and cares for these vineyards for a period of 40 months, PAYING ALL EXPENSES, INCLUDING INTEREST AND TAXES. There is nothing to give you any concern—the work, the difficulties, the responsibility, are all on our shoulders. At the end of 40 months we deliver your producing vineyard to you. It is then that you have a fuller realization of the splendid investment you have made—in raisin lands full of richness and productivity.

The Southern California Development Corporation is composed of men of high standing—leaders in financial and industrial activities combined to make the Corporation one of the notable development concerns of California. Its officers and directors are as follows:

Frank E. Green, President Growers' Security Bank, Delano; R. F. Angell, Capitalist, Chicago; Frederick W. Welsh, Attorney, Los Angeles; Rodney L. Turner, President First National Bank of Pixley, Delano; Orra E. Monnette, Director Citizens Trust & Savings Bank, Los Angeles, R. Hawley, President First National Bank, Delano; F. E. Keeler, President Keeler Oil Co. and Empire China Co., Mason City, Ia.; Dr. Chas. M. Pusey, Vinyardist, Fresno; Jerry P. Shields, County Treasurer of Kern County, Bakersfield; W. A. Bonynge, Jr., Vice-President Commercial National Bank, Los Angeles; Harry E. DeVenney, Real Estate, Beverly Hills.

It is said that OPPORTUNITY knocks at one's door but once in a lifetime. Opportunity knocks for YOU—Now. YOUR opportunity is in

HARBOR SITE OF NEW INDUSTRY

Portable Buildings Made in Standard Sections

Can Load Giant Warehouse on Single Freight Car

Simplifies Keep of Labor on Big Contracts

A novel industry and unique organization has just made Los Angeles its home base, which is the natural outgrowth of the many huge field operations involved in big development projects of the last two decades and the certainty that the present decade and the years beyond will witness even larger undertakings along with many comparatively smaller—ranging from a few millions to hundreds of millions in cost, requiring subsistence and shelter for armies of men in regions remote from ordinary sources of supply.

The man at the head of the new enterprise is C. R. Renno; the same man who had charge of the subsistence and shelter for five years of the 5000 men working on the Los Angeles aqueduct from 1910 to 1915, with sometimes as many as fifty camps to be provided for, fed and housed; of the Yosemite project when it was under development; and of a dozen other projects during the period since 1908, involving the keeping of groups and bodies of men supplied with the necessaries and comforts of life while working on engineering projects. And the new industry is the result of his expert knowledge of the needs of such engineering projects, gained on these big California developments.

ON TERMINAL ISLAND

The General Supply Company has been incorporated for $100,000; has secured five acres of land on Terminal Island at the harbor, adjoining the yards and mills of the Hammond Lumber Company; has already erected three buildings of a group of six with which it will improve the tract; and will immediately begin operations on the manufacture of portable industrial buildings in standard sections, which can be shipped to any destination and can be erected in a few hours by the carpenters on the job, no matter how large the buildings may be.

A number of patents have been taken out by Mr. Renno, covering special joints for quickly bolting roofs to siding, trussing the roofs and making the structures readily convertible from one size or style to another and for re-erecting them in different shapes to meet changing requirements.

All the sections are about 6x12 feet—for floors, sidings, roofs; all are manufactured on templates for securing absolute uniformity; all are interchangeable—that is, all floor sections are exactly alike, all door and window sections are exactly alike, all siding sections and all roof sections are exactly alike—and a building of any length and width can be quickly put together and can be as quickly taken apart and rebuilt into other sizes and shapes.

The company will also manufacture all the furniture needed for the buildings on a similar plan. Kitchens, mess halls, offices, warehouses, stores, stock buildings, refrigerating buildings on the evaporation principle, all will be supplied from the same factory with all the equipment required in the way of furniture and supplies, and all will be on the same principle of standard units.

Certain of the building standards are so made that when the camp is through with its engineering the buildings can be remodeled into cottages for residence purposes by the simple unbolting and rejoining of standard sections, the buildings will be sold or rented for the period of the job and a huge stock of sections will be carried so that instant shipment can be made of sections for any number of buildings, loaded on freight cars and when through can be reloaded and returned to the plant.

Standard plans cover such buildings for labor camps on engineering projects as: warehouses, commissary buildings, mess halls, sleeping quarters, bath-houses, meat houses, offices, stores, markets, pool and billiard halls, mountain cabins and homes, all of which are needed in large camps and on large projects using hundreds or thousands of men.

Another set of standards covers similar buildings partly or entirely of canvas; and furniture for all of them.

ALSO SUBSISTENCE

The company will also contract and manage the subsistence for working camps of any size and to cover any period of time whether it be months or years and furnish all the foods, cooks, equipment and paraphernalia required; and Mr. Renno declares that projects aggregating in excess of a billion of dollars are in sight for such operations within a few years, for all of which his new company will be prepared to furnish the buildings and the commissary.

The Union Pacific tracks enter the site, on which for manufacturing and supply purposes there are to be erected at once a manufacturing building, an assembling plant, a warehouse for materials, a furniture and paint factory, a display building and a mountain cabin, all built of the same standard sections and enabling all points of construction to be seen at a glance by the contractor in search of equipment.

While already in shape to take contracts and orders, the plant will be completed within a few weeks and will soon be employing a force of fifty men which will be sufficient for all the demands expected this season.

The officers of the company are: C. R. Renno, president and general manager; Dr. C. H. Coleman, vice-president and treasurer; A. M. Cahn, secretary; and while general offices will be maintained at the harbor plant, city offices have also been established in the O. T. Johnson Building

This is the only industry of its kind in the United States, according to Mr. Renno, which in addition to feeding and housing the labor gangs on big work will also supply through development of the sectional standards, all the buildings of every character needed on the job, in such form that they can be returned intact to the factory or can be changed into permanent homes either on the ground or at any point to which it may be desired to ship them.

Form Syndicate to Subdivide Valley Ranch

Arrangements for the subdivision of the Bliss and Dickey ranch, comprising 243 acres west of Van Nuys by a syndicate of Los Angeles and Van Nuys business men have been completed, according to a recent announcement. This property, which includes some of the best land in the valley, has a frontage of about 330 feet on West Sherman Way, of approximately a mile and a quarte on West Vanowen street, and a mile on Woodley avenue.

The Sherman Way frontage is served by the Pacific Electric Railroad, and Vanowen street is soon to be paved, affording ready access to all parts of the property. Gas and electricity are to be installed by the subdividers, and restrictions governing the type of improvement will be placed on the property, so as to assure proper development.

R. C. Smith and A. E. Streeter hold the option on the land, and under their direction the syndicate is being formed. A number of prominent men have already become interested in the development. These include George B. Jess, Lewis E. Bliss, Rollin C. Smith, B. R. Hollaway, John J. Shinners, H. J. Clever, G. W. Dickey, Frank X. Pfaffinger, John R. Wardlaw, W. J. Petit and A. E. Streeter.

LONG BEACH HOTED

Preliminary plans for a thirteen-story class A store and hotel building, to be erected at the northwest corner of Ocean Boulevard and Elm avenue, Long Beach, have been prepared by Architects Curlett & Beelman.

Lot Buyers!
Why Not An Acre Instead of 50 Feet?

If you were laid off or disabled tomorrow, how would the payments on a city home be met? Could you make your living on a small lot if business went bad? Now, why not buy an acre or two in "The Valley Beautiful," commuting distance from the city? On this Garden Homesite you can raise enough fruit, vegetables and chickens to support your family—and meet the payments on a home. YOU WILL NOT STARVE ON AN ACRE OF OUR RICH LOAM SOIL—WITH CITY WATER. Ask for pamphlet. Autos will take you over the Ventura Boulevard and Sherman Way any week day, or drive out Sunday to Tract between Marion and Zelzah on Reseda Avenue, San Fernando Valley.

Belmont Shore Place Lots

Think of it! Kitchen linoleum is actually more expensive per square yard than land at Belmont Shore Place. At the extremely low price of $750 for a lot this is an actual fact. We are not merely saying this to make a casual statement, because we can show you this fact in a very few seconds, in convincing figures.

Long Beach Is East Bound

On the west, Long Beach harbor and the Industrial district has cut off all residential growth; on the north, blackened oil derricks tower above once beautiful residences, and on the south the Pacific Ocean has turned the tide of homeseekers in one direction: Eastward to Belmont Shore Place.

MONEY IS SAFE IN CHIHUAHUA

Large Sums Carried Through Streets With Impunity

New Labor Law is Center of Considerable Discord

Day-to-Day Contracts Being Made by Employers

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHIHUAHUA (Mex.) Sept. 23. Mexico is the land of the unexpected. All accepted rules and traditions are smashed in this land of pease and war, plenty and proverty, sunshine and storm. Chihuahua city has a population of between 40,000 and 50,000. It has been in the very midst of the revolutionary activities. It has been captured and recaptured time and again. On every hand is seen mute evidence of armed conflicts in shell-torn houses that have not yet been repaired.

For more than ten years the State has been overrun by fighting armies and for months at a time every railroad leading into or out of the city was torn up and all trains abandoned. Under such conditions the natural assumption would be that the merchants would all be bankrupt but such is far from being the case.

The United States Consul, located at Chihuahua with jurisdiction over the greater portion of the State, is authority for the statement that during all these turbulent years there has been but two failures and one of these was comparatively unimportant.

On visiting the city after an absence of ten years I find many firms that were in business in the prerevolutionary period. A number of these firms are under the same management as formerly while others continue under younger and more active management.

Another unexpected thing the visitor to this country encounters when he crosses the border is the abundance of gold in circulation. At a time when every other nation in the world is hoarding its gold supply Mexico is putting hers in circulation. The only money in circulation is gold and silver. Paper money is an unknown and unseen commodity.

Still another unexpected condition is the freedom with which men and boys walk about the streets of the city carrying in sacks large sums of money. This money is carried openly and carelessly through the streets at all hours of the day. Checks are used to only a limited degree in this country and settlements between banks and between firms and individuals are made by exchanging the actual cash. This money is sent to and from the banks and to and from individuals by young boys and men and many of them carry sums running into the thousands of dollars.

How far would an unprotected boy carrying a jingling bag of gold coins worth $4000 or $5000 dangling from his hand get in one of the streets of the average American city? Yet this is a common occurrence in this land of unexpected things and no one thinks anything about it.

TO SUBDIVIDE ESTATE

The Terrazas estate comprising between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 acres of land in this state has been taken over by a land and trust company operating in conjunction with the Federal government and is now being surveyed preparatory to being sold to actual home owners on yearly payments.

The law that is causing the most excitement and discussion in this state is the so-called "strangle law." On August 15, the State of Chihuahua put into effect a labor law containing some very radical provisions. At first this law was looked upon with no little apprehension; in actual practice it is proving anything but the panacea for all economic ills its advocates proclaimed for it and not an unmixed evil for the employer.

Some of the more radical provisions of the labor act provide that no boy under 18 years of age shall be given employment; all regular employees shall share in all the profits of their employer; if an employee becomes sick his employer shall pay him his regular wages for at least two months if he continues sick that long, and that if an employee is hurt while in the employ of a firm or individual such firm or individual shall pay him certain amounts for his injuries.

When this act first passed there was great apprehension among employers as to what effect it would have an industry, many believing that it would practically amount to confiscating all business employing any number of employees.

On the 15th inst. when the law became effective all boys under the age limit were discharged. Now, the modern Mexican boy of 18 is very much like the American boy of 18. They both think they should have just about whatever they want and when these boys were discharged they set up a howl. How effective their howling is going to be, time alone will tell.

DAILY CONTRACTS

To get around the other provisions of the act the employers are adopting the method of making a contract with their employees each day. When they come to work in the morning if the employer needs them the employee signs a contract stipulating that the contract is for one day only and that the percentage of profit which the employer might owe the employee is a certain percent. This is usually placed at one per cent and as the prevailing wage is from three to three and a half pesos a day the profit received by the employee is not very large.

When the day is gone the employee is paid and the contract is ended.

The next morning when the employee shows up if he is needed a new contract for the day is entered into and he goes to work. If he is not needed he is not put to work and he goes elsewhere to look for a job or loafs all day. The effect of this method is to keep the laborer on the uncertain seat all the time for he never knows when night comes whether he has a job for the morrow or no. It also enables the employer to keep his force down to the minimum each day.

What the outcome of this experiment in labor legislation will be no one can foretell, but it is safe to predict that when the State legislature meets next month there will be a number of amendments made to the act as it now stands and some freely predict that its teeth will be practically all extracted and that the labor people will be the most insistent that the law be changed or repealed.

EXPORTS DOUBLE

Notwithstanding the experimenting in legislation and the back swale of the long years of revolution the country is rapidly recovering.

This is evidenced by a comparison of the exports from the State for the first six months of 1922 with the first six months of 1921.

There were exported from the State of Chihuahua during the first six months of 1922 goods and products to the value of $3,908,147. For the same months of 1922 there was exported $6,283,721, practically double.

Local people have begun the construction of a new railroad from Chihuahua city to the Santa Clara section, a distance of about eighty miles. All the preliminary work has been done and actual grading on the road bed has begun. This road is financed principally by local people.

There is a demand in this country for American goods. The trade opportunities offered here might be compared to a large fruit tree on which hangs luscious fruit to be had for the picking, but the fruit hangs high and to get it the ladder must be placed in the right place. The fruit is here and is to be had. All that is needed is that it be picked in the right manner.

MONTH WILL BE OVER AVERAGE

September Total Will Exceed Ten Millions, According to Indications

The September building record will be well above average, although it will not equal that of August, according to figures given out yesterday by the local building department. Up to and including Friday, 3136 permits, with a valuation of $7,344,609 were issued. During the same period in August, 3150 permits, with a valuation of $7,990,073 were taken out.

It is expected that the total for the month will be between $10,500,000 and $11,000,000. There are no large permits in prospect for this month, and to date the largest single permit was for $400,000.

New Tract to Be Placed on Market Soon

To meet the increasing demand for homesites in the district between Los Angeles and the sea, plans are now being prepared by the Los Angeles Investment Company for a new subdivision, in the Vernon-Van Ness portion of the company's holdings, according to an announcement made yesterday by W. H. Harrison, general manager of the company. Definite plans for the marketing of this tract, which will extend along the recently projected Vernon avenue route to the sea will be made in the near future.

The extension of Vernon avenue through to Mesa Drive has helped materially to relieve traffic congestion on Washington, West Adams and Slauson, and has opened a new route to the beaches, and it is expected that this will in the near future become one of the main-traveled routes.

The important part taken by the company in the upbuilding of Los Angeles is shown by the fact that last year approximately $2,500,000 in houses and lots were purchased from the company by homeseekers, and the total this year, according to present indications, will be well in excess of $2,000,000. Recently sales to the value of more than $250,000 were made by the company in one day at Vernon-Van Ness Square. This, it is believed, stands as a record for one day's business.

New Industry to be Located at Long Beach

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONG BEACH, Sept. 23.—Another manufacturing concern is seeking location in Long Beach's rapidly growing industrial section, according to a recent announcement. The new company is the L. and B. Manufacturing Company of Santa Barbara. Executive offices of the concern are located in the Hibernian Building, Los Angeles.

The company, which manufactures automobile locks and which will produce what is to be known as the Lewis handcuff automobile lock, is capitalized at $750,000 and is headed by Arthur F. Balsam as president, Anson F. Lewis as vice-president and William Zeller as secretary and treasurer. It was indicated by officials of the company that the proposed plant here will require a site of five acres.

BIG OFFICE BUILDING RISING AT FULLERTON

FULLERTON, Sept. 23.—A splendid five-story fireproof store and office building, declared to be the largest and most complete in the county is being erected at the northwest corner of Spadra Road and Wilshire avenue by C. C. Chapman. The plans call for a $200,000 steel, brick and concrete building 70x130 feet and sixty-five feet in height, with ornamental brick walls on both Spadra and Wilshire frontages. There will be a main store room on the ground floor 50x118 feet, with a 17x80-foot corner store room and an annex on the Wilshire side.

HOMES ARE IN GREAT DEMAND

Many Pasadena Sales Closed During Past Week

Cantlie Residence Purchased by Eastern Man

Unimproved Lots Moving in Considerable Volume

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PASADENA, Sept. 23.—A fine business in residence property continues in Pasadena, and a number of sales of attractive homes of the more expensive sort have been added to a big volume of smaller transactions.

The home of the late James A. Cantlie, a fine Spanish Colonial place of fifteen rooms and five baths, situated on the famous Deodar Pine Drive at Santa Rosa and Mariposa streets, has been sold to an eastern buyer by the Blankenhorn Realty Company. The buyer, whose name is withheld, has spent the last two winters in Pasadena and has purchased this house for a permanent winter home. The grounds are well planted and are five acres in extent. The purchase price was not announced.

The same company has sold for Charles N. Post, the residence at 550 La Mesa Place, in the Arroyo Park section. Fred J. Loomis, the buyer, is a former Pasadenan who has been on active duty in the Naval Reserve in the San Diego district. Charles F. Sawyer has purchased the residence of Alex A. Nottmeyer at 985 Oakland avenue, also through the Blankenhorn company. Two lots in Rubio Heights, bought by Dr. E. B. Hubley and Leland McAuley from H. M. Dobbins, and a large tract at Linda Vista avenue and El Mirador Drive, bought by George D. Hoffman from three owners, are other Blankenhorn transactions.

The William Wilson Company reports recent sales amounting to $125,000, of which the principal ones are a two-story colonial home in Flintridge, with two acres of ground, sold for Herman M. Brill to an unnamed purchaser; a two-story white plaster house in Oak Knoll, purchased by Mrs. Harriet S. Keith of Chicago, and a residence at 515 South Wilson avenue to Mrs. Florence C. Baldwin. The Wilson Company has sold seven lots in a tract adjoining Pasadena University and three lots in the Midway tract in South Pasadena.

All realtors report large numbers of inquiries for rentals for the winter.

Building permits of the week include: Mrs. Martha B. Burger, 656 South Lake avenue, seven-room house and garage, $7000; E. Hemenway, 491 Eldora Road, six-room house and garage, $5500; Lucina B. Rodi, 1596 East Mountain street, eleven-room house, $12,500; R. M. Roddick, 802 Arroyo Drive, five-room house and garage, $5000; Chosan & Mort, 1271 East Colorado street, two-store building, $7500; California Institute of Technology, electrical research building, $100,000; A. L. Gilbertson, 1494 Lincoln avenue, addition to house, $6000; Miss I. Brazier, 505 East California street, six-room house, $6000; C. R. Wilson, 532 Eldora Road, five-room house and garage, $5500.

Scenes in Residential Tract to be Opened Soon

The Foothills of Sparr Heights,

HOME-SITES ON VERDUGO ROAD

Sparr Holdings Will Soon be Placed on Market

Syndicate Formed to Take Over Property

Water for Large Population is Available

Development plans are being made by the syndicate which recently acquired the Sparr holdings, comprising 1500 acres lying northward and partially within the city limits of Glendale. The Sparr property, lying along Verdugo Road northeast and west of Verdugo Woodlands, has been taken over by Senator Leslie E. Francis, formerly of Des Moines, Iowa; H. E. Barnum of Eagle Rock and M. Walters of Hollywood.

Senator Francis recently purchased a half interest in the tract from Mr. Sparr, well-known fruit man, and with his associates, who will organise a company to be known as the Francis-Barnum-Walters Company, will improve and subdivide the acreage, which comprises a large amount of level, foothill and mountain land.

The development plans contemplate the establishment of another city park for Glendale, as well as subdivision of the property into several hundred residental lots, and a number of fine country estates.

Mr. Barnum was interested with Senator Francis several years ago in almond property in the Paso Robles district, and Mr. Walters is well known as a realty broker, having successfully subdivided tracts in Hollywood, Glendale and Eagle Rock recently. Mr. Walters will be in active charge of the extensive sales campaign to be launched by the organization.

Development work will be started immediately. Water sufficient for 40,000 people, is already available, it is stated, and gas and electricity will be supplied. It is also proposed to beautify the property with winding strets and driveways, and with ornamental parkways.

One of the boundaries of the tract is at Glendale avenue and Verdugo Road, and it extends to Montrose, the boundary line following the ridge of the mountains to the vicinity of the L. C. Brand home to the northwest of Glendale.

PENNY COMPANY OPENS STORE AT VISALIA

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VISALIA, Sept. 23.—The J. C. Penny Company has opened a new store in the Central Counties Gas Company Building on South Locust street under the efficient management of A. Shepherd, who has been in the company store at Bakersfield for the past four years. The Visalia branch is a new outfit in the chain of 371 stores, which covers twenty-nine States in the Union.

The Visalia store is one of the neatest and best equipped small stores in the city. All fixtures and counters are of fumed oak. Seven clerks and one cashier are employed. R. W. Dudding of Fresno and Maynard Jones of Ventura have been transferred here from other stores. Manager and Mrs. Shepherd and awo daughters, Carol and Marguerite, have moved into one of the new Lovelace bungalows on South Bridge street. Announcement is made of the sale of the Main Garage and Auto Company by Wade T. Finch to Otto W. Lake, who will operate the establishment as the Main Garage in future.

REDLANDS IS HOLDING PLACE IN PROGRAM

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, Sept. 23.—Redlands is keeping up with the procession in growing Southern California. M. E. Armstrong, building inspector, says that figures for about twenty of the leading cities of Southern California in building for August show an increase over last year of about $7,000,000. The total this year was $18,000,000 and last year it was about $11,000,000.

In many of the cities the estimated cost of building for August of this year was double that of last year and Redlands was one of them. Indications are that the total for the year here will be no less than 50 per cent greater than last year and most of this is for homes, for there have been few large buildings.

MAKES RAPID PROGRESS

Great Forward Strides Taken by Community of Bell During the Past Year

One of the most evident facts of the prosperity of Southern California is manifested in the phenomenal growth of the community of Bell, where property values have more than doubled in the last year. Bell is situated in the midst of beautiful surroundings of level orange groves, only a thirty-minute street-car ride from Los Angeles, and reached by a bus connection at Huntington Park or by direct service of the Pacific Electric.

One of the main highways from Los Angeles to San Diego runs through the center of the town. The business section is located on this street. Good boulevards by which all mountain and beach resorts can be readily reached radiate from Bell.

The town was subdivided twenty years ago by J. B. Bell, the original subdivision comprising 360 acres, and was a part of the De [illegible] estate. From a hamlet of [illegible] people it has achieved distinction as one of the fastest-growing [illegible] of Southern California. [illegible] of new properties contiguous to the original townsite [illegible] the territory until [illegible] two miles square. The population is now 8000.

The growth within the last year has been extraordinary; where there was only one two-story brick building three years ago, now the main street is lined on either side with fireproof and modern buildings. The facades of the buildings are all in line, set back from the curbings so the street may be widened. One of the immediate needs of the town is larger quarters for the increased postoffice.

Modern shops, offices of professional men and every conceivable business organization in any town are housed in these up-to-date buildings. There are two banking institutions, with large deposits and resources. A modern theater equipped with a pipe organ has recently been completed.

There are four grammar school buildings in Bell and its environs, Maywood and Cudahy, and it is part of the district of the Huntington Park Union High School, which is one of the most modern-equipped educational institutions in Southern California. Five religious denominations have organized congregations here, and four having their own beautiful buildings.

The homes of a great majority of industrial workers are here, as the community is adjacent to the industrial district of Los Angeles. Practically 90 per cent of the residents own their own homes. They are people of the great middle class of moderate and independent means, who enjoy the social fellowship of a rural community. A recent organization of an orchestra of twenty-four members, under the leadership of a prominent citizen, gives much pleasure to the community, as well as its members. All of the houses are of the popular modern bungalow type, so well known in California.

The enthusiasm of the populace was manifested a few weeks ago when more than 6000 people attended the first annual all-day celebration, which was sponsored by the merchants of the town.

The larger part of the city is sidewalked and curbed. Gas and electricity are supplied at reasonable rates. Though not incorporated, the community owns and operates its own adequate water system. An election in October, when the question of incorporation will be voted upon, is one of the many issues brought about by the Business Men's Association.

Improvements at Big Bear Camp Planned

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

BEAR VALLEY, Sept. 23.—Rumors are current in Big Bear Valley that there is a plan on foot for the expansion of Fawnskin, the well known resort on the north side of the lake, into a million dollar camp, and one of the finest in the valley. There is to be a large force of workmen there all winter, it is said, and all the lots in the resort have been withdrawn from the market.

It is said that a number of Los Angeles capitalists have become associated with C. E. Miller, the owner of the resort, and that they plan to expand it as rapidly as possible by building big clubhouses and other buildings including a great number of cabins. The location of the resort is admirable for the purpose since it is at the junction of the north shore road with the Deep Creek cut off which is to be built at once by the Federal government and the State to make the shortest road into the valley.

It is probable that a winter resort on the north shore of the lake is planned since the north shore road is free from snow most of the year. The view from Fawnskin across the valley is one of the best for there is a vista of snow clad Graybaok and Mt. San Bernardino across the waters of the lake.

USE MULTIPLE LISTING

Twelve realtors of the Tulare Realty Board have been operating under the multiple listing plan of selling real estate for the past three months. The system is a big help to the dealers and to owners of real property, C. E. Taylor, secretary of the Realty Board, declared.

Lease on Olive Involves Over Half Million

The leasing of the four-story and basement brick building at 619-623 South Olive street to the Weaver-Jackson Company by Donald Dorr and associates for a period of twenty years at a total rental of $506,250 was announced yesterday by Walter Brown, of the commercial properties department of W. A. Heitman & Co.

The first floor of the building, 55x125 feet, will be used by the Weaver-Jackson Company for one of the most modern beauty and hair-dressing parlors in the city. At the rear of the building an addition, 55x30 feet, will be built by the lessees, who plan the expenditure of between $100,000 and $150,000 for improvements. The upper floors of the building will be used as a hotel.

The Weaver-Jackson Company, which recently incorporated for $500,000, has been engaged in business here for thirty-one years, during which time it has been located on Broadway, between Fourth and Fifth streets. Present headquarters at 450 South Broadway will be retained.

To Start Work on New Legion Club Building

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LEMOORE, Sept. 23.—Work is to start at once on the new $20,000 clubhouse for the Lemoore post of the American Legion. Dave Cahill has been awarded the contract. The building will be of mission style, on a frontage of 100 feet. Plans call for an auditorium 50x100 feet, with large stage and dressing-rooms. The legion will have a special clubroom for organization meetings, but provision has also been made for similar meetings of other organizations in the city.

When completed, a space 30x100 feet at the rear of the building will be available, and it is believed that this will be used next year for a community swimming pool.

FOR WAREHOUSE

Macdonald & Driver were the lowest regular bidders, and will be awarded the contract at about $52,000 for the two-story, class A warehouse to be built at Mill and Industrial streets for the Poultry Producers of Southern California. Plans for the building were prepared by Architect Albert C. Martin.

Closes Out Interest in Subdivision

The George M. Sunday Company has disposed of its holdings in Hollywood Sunset Square to J. E. Green for a total consideration of $125,000. This disposes of the entire acreage subdivided by this company and placed on the market some five months ago. The George M. Sunday Company is now erecting a forty-three room hotel, located on the corner of Sunset and Ridgewood. The purchaser of the last block of this property, J. E. Green, proposes to develop this porperty with income buildings.

STORES AND FLATS

Roy L. Jones is preparing plans for a two-story frame store and apartment-building to be erected at Sixty-third street and Compton avenue for John Cralegro. It will contain two stores and four apartments.

FACTORY BUILDING

Plans for a four-story class A factory building are being prepared by W. J. Saunders. The building will be erected at Twenty-eighth and Main streets for Normandin Brothers' Company.

EASTMONT

"THE WORKINGMAN'S CITY"

BUILD A TEMPORARY HOME

A SMALL, temporary house on the rear of your lot in Eastmont will save you hundreds of dollars rent. This saving month after month will pay for the lot and put aside a good sum to later build a fine, permanent home. It is the only chance some workers have of getting ahead. But to ALL workers it's the greatest opportunity within reach.

HUNDREDS of our customers have made a real start by the temporary home route. Everyone has made money—not a cent has been lost. It's the big value you get in the lot against the small price you pay that gives YOU a big, quick profit. We are now offering our greatest values in Eastmont. A lot will be worth much more than present prices long before you even have it paid for.

Big Improved Lots As Low As $450

$25 Deposit---$10 per Month

Including Gas, Water, Electricity and Complete System of Hard Rock and Oiled Streets

Eastmont is less than three weeks old. Yet it is smashing all subdivision sales records. Scores of lots have been sold to people living around Eastmont—to investors—to land experts—and to others who KNOW real land values.

Eastmont is the crown of the best and fastest growing section of the east side. It faces directly upon the famous Whittier boulevard—across the street from where the Union Pacific System will spend millions of dollars for new shops and payroll development. It is the front door of Southern California's greatest industrial, business and residential progress. Eastmont is a beacon of opportunity for the workingman who wants to get ahead.

MANY FAMILIES SETTLING UTAH

Year's Progress in Pahvant Valley Development

Over 3000 Acres of Irrigated Lands Taken Up

Three Counties in Co-operative Marketing Plan

Events have been moving on the Union Pacific trail to Salt Lake City from Los Angeles, since the spring announcements of railroad building, irrigation and artesian well development in Millard county, the opening of the Pahvant Valley to settlement, all of which at the time of publication in The Times heralded the definite annexation of another rich region of 300,000 acres of agricultural lands to the back country depending on our world port for a gateway and on which Los Angeles in turn depends for part of its future sustenance.

S. A. Greenwood of Delta, who is at the head of one of the largest agricultural land developments, with offices in the H. W. Hellman Building, was in the city during the past week, having motored down over the Arrowhead Trail, which is a direct road between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City. He reports progress in various directions not least among which is the fac tthat work is progressing at several points on the Arrowhead Trail in the way of hard surfacing.

CARLOADS TO L. A.

He reports the scenic marvels of this new trail into the back country as of surpassing beauty, and predicts for this road, even before it is modernized, a place of first popularity among the thousands of tourists who are seeking new thrills among the little known lands of the opening country.

He states also that perhaps the most important development of all is the organization of a co-operative marketing association by the farmers of Millard, Beaver and Iron counties, reaching from the central to the southern part of the State of Utah. This co-operative marketing association he states is modeled after some of the successful California institutions; but instead of being confined to a single product such as raisins, walnuts, oranges, lemons, etc., it embraces all the fruits, vegetables and grains. Depots are being established in all the towns, he says, for handling all the products of the members, whether in small lots or large, and that these are then assembled for carload shipment to Los Angeles. In furtherance of this plan he states that the Union Pacific has granted carload rates on mixed cars, thus obviating the necessity for refrigerating and giving a constant market even to the smallest farmers.

HUNDRED FAMILIES

He reports the new branch railroad of the Union Pacific from Delta to Fillmore as entirely graded and ready for ties and rails. These will be laid, he states, within the next two months, thus throwing open the entire south part of the irrigation district to transportation of passengers and freight.

A total of not less than a hundred families from the East have settled on the bench lands irrigated from the Sevier high-line canal, taking up over 8000 acres on the very easy terms as to cash, but obligated to put half under cultivation the first year and the balance the next year; which means 8000 acres all under cultivation by the end of 1923. He reports interest on the increase, and had to leave Los Angeles on a hurry call to meet and locate a party of six families trekking overland from Omaha by flivver with all their household goods and ready to begin farming in the new valley the day they land.

Hundreds of men and teams are at work on the completion of the irrigation system, both the high-line feeder and the valley laterals, he says, and the entire valley has taken on an air of activity such as it has not known in all the half-century since it was settled by the Mormons. These latter, he states, are extending a welcoming hand to the new settlers, having adjusted themselves to the idea of modern development, and he predicts within a year or two there will be something in the nature of a stampede to the new lands.

TO GROW APPLES

A recent development, he states, has been a survey by horticultural experts of the high lands above the canal, and the conclusion that these lands are admirably adapted to apples. Apples have been raised for sixty years on the bench lands, of fine flavor, though not in large quantities, owing to the lack of marketing facilities. With the opening of the lands to transportation and the Los Angeles market, he estimates that 100,000 acres of these hill lands will become available for apple orcharding; that the fruit, by reason of the changing seasons, the fifteen inches average rainfall and the soil enabling cultivation with about a sixth of the water needed for other crops, will turn these higher lands into a natural apple country for Southern California's supply; and that the apples will be of highest grade as to size, color and juiciness.

THRIFTY COLONY

The settlers coming in are of a thrifty, American type, Mr. Greenwood says, and none but desirable neighbors are admitted, with the purpose of building up in these Utah valleys a community representative of the best American traditions, capable of standing the gaff during the pioneer years while building up a region of sturdy human stock.

Further south, in Iron county, Utah, the Union Pacific is surveying another branch from Lund on the main line to Cedar City in the mineral mountains, destined to create a vast mineral tonnage for the line to the city and port.

As developments of less than a year, since publicity was first given to these back-country plans in The Times, Mr. Greenwood expressed himself and all the interested leaders in the new regions as well satisfied or more than satisfied. They regard the start as unusually promising, and upon it they base the declaration that a few more years will find this region largely under cultivation and that instead of terra incognita it will be a favorite route for the city folk who want to see nature in majestic mood and production under happy auspices and surroundings.

Involved in Big Lease Transaction

Store Building and Garage

At the southwest corner of Ninth and Alvarado streets sold by H. A. Dutton to L. L. Fletcher of Cleveland for $120,000. Mr. Fletcher, in turn, leased the property to Mr. Dutton for a ninety-nine-year period at a total rental of $1,200,000. Both deals were handled by Mr. Gram of Kells & Grant, realtors.

the Salvation Army at the corner of Sixth and Boylston streets. The building will be used in lieu of the Young Women's Boarding Home on Grand avenue, purchased several months ago by the Biltmore Hotel interests.

The new building, which will be a five-story class C structure, will occupy a site 178 feet by 150. The corner of the building has been eliminated, so as to provide for the extension of Fifth street, which will join Sixth at this point.

The first floor will contain a large parlor, 27 by 82 feet, the dining-room, 40 by 70 feet, and at the rear the laundry and service quarters. The upper floors will be given over to approximately 170 double and single rooms. The manager's living quarters comprising a living-room, dining-room, kitchen, two bedrooms and bath, will be located on the first floor.

Equipment will include two automatic elevators, and the building will have its own refrigerating plant, laundry, and incinerator. The building is so designed that two additional wings, containing about 100 rooms, can be erected later, as more space is required. Excavation work has already started, and construction of the building will be carried on as rapidly as possible.

PUBLIC MARKET

Arrangements have been completed for the erection of what is said to be the largest public market in Los Angeles, and one of the largest on the Pacific Coast. The property on which this market will be built is located between Seventh and Eighth streets, fronting on three streets, 160 feet on South Olive, 65 feet on Eighth, and 112 feet on Grand avenue. The building will cost approximately $150,000 and it is said, will cover in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 worth of property.

Five property owners are interested in the project: The Charles Murray family, Agnes Clune, J. W. Clune, Mary De Van, Caroline D. Trask, and Wilford Deming.

F. C. Huesman, the originator of the idea, took the matter up with Mr. Deming, an old property owner in that vicinity, who saw the possibility and need of such a market. The location is considered ideal since, with three large entrances the public will have every advantage in marketing.

Work will start on or before three months, as soon as the present tenants vacate. It is possible the market will be called the Arcade Market.

turer to build thereon an expensive manufacturing plant. It was sold in good faith and bought in good faith as industrial acreage. Plans for the building were drawn, and then under some sort of pressure the Council withdrew the land from industrial development. As in the other case, it was afterward restored, but again the fear of change of mind operated and the manufacturer chose another location, to himself less desirable, but indelibly dedicated to industrial uses.

It must be borne in mind that industry is developing as rapidly as is home building; that the Planning Commission owes as much to industrial zoning as to a residential, and that while protecting the home districts from invasion of objectionable buildings, it is just as necessary to protect the industrial investor against change of mind by powers subject to personal and political pressure for any reason.

A Happy Ending

It was an inspiring spectacle which greeted the gaze of the onlooker at the Hollywood Bowl a week ago last night when 50,000 people attended the last of the summer series of concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Taxed to capacity, the great bowl was completely filled with a mass of humanity, and thousands of people, unable to find accommodations, sat on the adjacent hillsides. From the platform it was announced that the crowd was the largest ever assembled in Southern California for any musical event. And this great crowd brought to a close a season which has proved not only a financial, but an artistic success.

Cheers greeted the announcement that the summer season would be resumed next year—and the open-air concerts in a natural amphitheater unexcelled in beauty and in acoustic qualities on the Pacific Coast promise to become an established feature of the life of Los Angeles, to the great credit of the city and of those who have labored unceasingly, during the past three months, to make the series of musical feasts the success which was due them by reason of the high caliber of the performances, which, early in the season, did not, it must be confessed, receive the support from the music lovers of Los Angeles that they deserved.

But all that is past; the Bowl, thoroughly popularized by the series of concerts of this summer, has become an established success, an integral part of the life of Los Angeles, and the financial difficulties of those who have labored so earnestly for many months to achieve this end seem in a fair way to be permanently solved.

To make the Bowl thoroughly practicable and usable, there are a number of improvements to be made, but these can be carried out as the finances permit; with the present equipment, the work can be carried on for several years to come. But when money is available, the present rough wooden benches should be replaced with seats of a more beautiful and more permanent character. A new stage can be built, and judicious planting of the hillsides around the Bowl with hardy native trees and shrubbery would serve greatly to enhance its beauty. And arrangements for parking automobiles, and for handling the traffic, will serve to alleviate the condition which prevailed at the final concert. But these are things of the future. The big and vital present fact that the Bowl has established itself in the hearts of residents of Los Angeles.

HOLLYWOOD RESIDENCE

Architects Russell and Alpaugh are completing plans for a large residence to be built in Hollywood for C. E. Toberman. The house will contain fourteen rooms and six bathrooms. It will cost about $60,000.

BUSINESS NEWS OF BUSY MARTS

Cotton, Unchanged, Shows Bullish Indications

Trade With Asia Shows Substantial Gain

Expansion of Pacific Coast Bank Loans Continues

Cotton prices showed practically no change during the past week. New York spots closed yesterday at 21.40 cents a pound, compared to 21.50 cents on the previous Saturday, and the futures followed this same narrow range of variation.

Analyzing current cotton opinion, the prevailing sentiment at present appears to be that the market is pointing toward higher prices. The outlook is for gradually increasing world use, with improved domestic consumption. Minimum world requirements this year should be around 17,000,000 bales. Maximum figures show a supply of 15,000,000 bales, which cannot be enlarged and which weather and weevils combined are daily making less.

Spinners' takings of American cotton last season aggregated 13,000,000 bales. Domestic consumption for August was larger than that of any month of the previous season. Mills that have been idle for many weeks on account of strikes are beginning to reopen. Southern mills are running full time, some at night. Stocks of goods are low, while wheat is too cheap, yet the purchasing power of farmers is greater than last year. On all sides the outlook is for a consumption at least equal to that of last year, if not larger.

Some conditions in Europe cause apprehension. Yet the claim is made that German textile mills cannot keep up with outside offers for goods. French spinners consumed more cotton last year than the preceding season, and profitably. England is the largest purchaser of American cotton. Its exports of yarns and cloths in July were greater than in June. Its total exports of yarns and cloths this year are larger than the preceding season. World outlook is for a gradually increasing absorption of cotton. Takings should be as large this year as last.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE

Optimistic figures are forthcoming at present on the volume of our trade with South America and the Orient. Pre-war volume is being greatly exceeded and sizeable increases are being registered over the corresponding periods of last year.

Reversing the tendency of 1921, trade of the United States with South America has steadily increased since January, 1922. Volume for the first seven months of 1922 was $308,000,000 compared with $383,000,000 for seven months of 1921, and $196,000,000 in 1913.

In seven months of 1921 the volume of trade was valued at $845,000,000, with an excess of $178,500,000 in imports over exports. By July, 1921, trade volume was only $13,000,000 higher than that of July, 1913. Further declines reduced the volume of January, 1922, to $26,600,000 compared with $92,100,000 in January, 1921, and with $34,300,000 in January, 1913. July, 1922, volume was $49,000,000.

Our Asiatic trade for both July and seven months ended July, 1922, was higher than a year ago. In seven months ended July, 1920, it reached $1,400,000,000 with $310,000,000 balance adverse to us.

Gradual recovery has brought volume to more than $700,000,000, with an adverse balance of $162,000,000. This comparatively modest showing exceeded by more than $470,000,000 the volume for seven months of 1913.

LOANS EXPAND

Continued expansion of bank loans in the nine reserve cities of the Twelfth Federal Reserve District took place during the week ended September 13. The present total, however, is still slightly under last year's level for the same period. Total loans and discounts of sixty-eight member banks, as shown in the weekly compilation released yesterday, were $869,927,000, as against $866,824,000 during the previous week and $878,078,000 a year ago.

Net demand deposits showed an unusually large increase, advancing $6,372,000 during the week to $639,500,000. Time deposits, however, increased only $516,000 to $550,539,000. There were also slight increases in "bills payable with the Federal Reserve Bank" and "bills rediscounted with the Federal Reserve Bank."

FORD REORGANIZATION?

Henry Ford is to reorganize, it is learned on good authority. Charles Sorenson, in charge of River Rouge plant, is about to step out. Leo Hurst, for many years, head of the drafting department, and James Miller, head of the foundry department, have left and joined the General Motors Corporation.

The state of reorganization is said to be largely responsible for the shutdown and has resulted in determination by Ford to take a more active interest in business. For the past year or more he has left the management of his company to his assistants. An outcome of this new move will be complete change of policy, it is said.

ASSOCIATED RUMORS

Accompanying the strength of Associated Oil during a period of general market reaction are rumors of increasing earnings and a higher or special dividend disbursement. Expanding demand for fuel oil is reported to be an important factor in this connection. Current gossip refers to a small floating supply of this stock as a result of accumulation during the past few weeks. Merger reports are also heard.

BIG PINEAPPLE DEAL

The Hawaiian Pineapple Company has received an eighteen-year lease on 12,000 acres of island pineapple land and a cash consideration of approximately $1,250,000 from the Waialua Agricultural Company, in return for a one-third interest in its stock. The deal, consummated in San Francisco last week, is said to be the biggest in the history of the Hawaiian pineapple industry and will place the Hawaiian Pineapple Company in a dominant position. An increase in the company's capitalization to provide for the delivery of stock to the Waialua company is considered likely.

HAY PRICES

Cheaper grades of alfalfa were scarce on the Los Angeles market last week and prices showed a generally firm tendency. Barley hay was slightly weaker. Paying prices for carload lots, f. o. b. Los Angeles, were reported yesterday as follows: choice rabbit alfalfa, $29 a ton, choice dairy alfalfa, $25, choice barley hay, $21, No. 1 barley hay, $18, choice oat hay, $24, No. 1 oat hay, $21.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

Daylight saving ended in New York City at 1 o'clock this morning with the result that, in the future, local followers of the New York markets can advance their time schedules one hour. The close on the big board will come at 1 p.m. instead of noon. Times of Chicago and other eastern markets are unchanged.

COLLEGE OF COMMERCE

The College of Commerce and Business Administration of the University of Southern California will reopen its evening classes this week. Among the leading courses to be offered are accounting, foreign trade and business economics. The classes will be conducted at 631 South Spring street.

OPEN THREE BRANCHES

Three new branches of the Pacific Southwest Trust and Savings Bank, open tomorrow. These branches are located at 727 North Broadway, to be known as the North Broadway and Alpine Branch, at 540-542 West Washington street, which will be called the Washington and Figueroa Branch, and the third in Wilmington to be known as the Wilmington Branch.

PERSONAL MENTION

Charles E. Kliefner, manager of the Los Angeles office of J. E. Miller and Company, left yesterday on an extensive inspection trip over various municipal irrigation districts in the Northwest which this firm now has under consideration.

Flaxseed

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DULUTH (Minn.) Sept. 23.—An accumulation of overnight selling orders from operators who had been active on the buying side in recent upturns was a depressing factor in the early flaxseed markets. When these had been executed the market turned slow and was dragging at the week close, prices off 5¼ to 8½ cents. September, 2.33½ bid; October, 2.30; November, 2.26½; December, 2.19¾ bid; on track, 2.36¾@2.37¾; to arrive, 2.31.

Minneapolis flaxseed demand fair; No. 1 seed on spot, 2.31@2.37; to arrive, 2.26@2.32. Receipts, eighteen cars.

WALL STREET NEWS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—It is reported that Burns Brothers is shortly to merge with the Consumers' Company, one of the leading interests in the Chicago coal trade and that plans at present under way include mergers of the Polar Wave Coal Company of St. Louis, the Metropolitan Coal Company of Boston and the Newton Coal Company of Philadelphia. When completed the new combination will be about a $50,000,000 concern. At the present time Burns Brothers has orders on hand totalling from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000, or about 3,000,000 tons.

American Steel and Wire has ordered twenty steel barges from the American Bridge Company. These are for immediate delivery and will be used for hauling coal and billets.

American Shipbuilding has sent word to its stockholders of a proposal to retire 71,000 shares of preferred stock, $100 par, authorized but unissued.

Although Consolidated Steel, the export agent for the leading independent steel companies, is known to be liquidating, it was thought that the process would not be completed until the end of next year. However, President E. A. S. Clark today issued a statement to the effect that the liquidation would necessitate a drastic reduction in the company's personnel. It is learned from other sources that a large number of employees have been notified that their services will no longer be needed after tomorrow. The independent companies are now quoting prices for export direct.

The Hudson Motor Company has followed the example of Willys-Overland and has reduced prices on all its cars about $150 with the Essex prices off about $50 per car. This news, however, was not unexpected, and had little effect on the motor group.

Chile Copper continues as one of the leaders in the copper group in point of activity if not in strength. In many quarters in the market, the belief is confidently held that Chile may go on a dividend basis in the not distant future. It has been noted for some time that traders have been showing a disposition to switch out of other coppers into Chile, favoring this issue because of the low production cost which enables the company to make good profits at the present selling price. The fact that both the 7 per cent and the 6 per cent bonds of the company have been showing consistent strength of late adds some color to this expectation.

DIVIDEND ACTIONS

The following regular quarterly dividends have been declared: American Shipbuilding preferred, 1¾ per cent; Arlington Mills common, 2 per cent; Austin Nichols preferred, 1¾ per cent; Beatrice Creamery preferred, 1¾ per cent; Beatrice Creamery common, 4 per cent; Brooklyn Borough Gas preferred, 2 per cent; Brooklyn Borough Gas common, 2 per cent; Canada Cement common, 1½ per cent; Chicago Railway Equipment, 2 per cent; Chicago Finance, 2½ per cent; City Dairy preferred, 1¾ per cent; City Dairy common, 2½ per cent; Consolidated Royalty Oil, 3 cents; Creamery Package Manufacturing preferred, 1½ per cent; Creamery Package common, 50 cents; Driver Harris Company preferred, 1¾ per cent; Elmira Water, Light and Railway first preferred, 1¾ per cent; Elmira Water, Light and Railway second preferred, 1¼ per cent; Equitable Trust, 4 per cent; Federal Oil, 10 cents; Fidelity International Trust, 2½ per cent; Fifth Avenue Bank, 6 per cent; Grennan Cake preferred, 2 per cent; Harrisburg Light and Power preferred, 1½ per cent; Hoover, Owens & Rent preferred, 1½ per cent; Houston Gas and Fuel preferred, 1¾ per cent; Kansas Gas and Electric preferred, 1¾ per cent; Lawton Mills, 2 per cent; Long Island Light preferred, 1¾ per cent; Mann, Max & Moore, 1 per cent; Marshall Oil, 20 cents; Mechanics and Metals National Bank, 5 per cent; Michigan Drop Forge preferred, 1¾ per cent; National Refrigerating preferred, 2 per cent; New York Trust preferred, 5 per cent; Northern Pacific, 1¾ per cent; Ohio Fuel Supply, 62½ cents; Osborn Mills, 1½ per cent; Otis Elevator preferred, 1½ per cent; Otis Elevator common, 2 per cent; Pan-American Gas and Electric preferred, 1½ per cent; Pan-American Gas and Electric common, 2½ per cent; Penmans, Ltd., preferred, 1½ per cent; Penmans, Ltd., common, 2 per cent; Philadelphia and Western preferred, 62½ cents; Portland Railway, Light and Power first preferred, 1½ per cent; Portland Railway, Light and Power prior preferred, 1¾ per cent; Proctor & Gamble 8 per cent preferred, 2 per cent; Reading common, $1; Safety Car Heating and Lighting, 1½ per cent; Savannah Electric and Power Series A, $2; Security Mortgage preferred, 1¾ per cent; West Pennsylvania Power preferred, 1¾ per cent.

The following monthly dividends have been declared: Cities Service preferred, ½ per cent; Cities Service preferred B, ½ per cent; Cities Service common, ½ per cent; Michigan Drop Forge, 25 cents.

The Savannah Electric and Power Company has declared a semiannual dividend of 3 per cent on preferred; the Ohio Fuel Supply has declared an extra dividend of $1.50; the Canadian Woolen preferred October, 1922, has deferred dividends; Kansas City Power and Light preferred A has declared initial dividends of $1.16 2-3; the Cities Service common has declared stock dividend of 1¼ per cent.

MEN AND BUSINESS

Inside Story of Ford's Hatred of the "Street;" German Currency; Applying Yankee Ideas

BY RICHARD SPILLANE

[Copyright, 1922, Public Ledger.]

Henry Ford and Wall Street are again throwing rocks at each other. Wall Street says Ford is the richest man in the world, an overlord in himself, and, at the rate he is piling up wealth, he will be the money power of America. It says he could capitalize his business at $2,000,000,000 and pay 5 per cent a year. It says he dwarfs Rockefeller and that, in throwing 100,000 men out of employment in his own plants and, possibly 50,000 or 60,000 in the plants that depend on him rather than pay the prevailing price for coal, he is actuated by spite.

Ford, on his part, alleges the men who are the heads of labor unions are pawns of the big interests who are playing a game to have the government take over the railroads and the coal mines at inflated prices, and part of their campaign is to create conditions so distressing and oppressive as to force the public to accept nationalization of fuel production and the transportation systems as the only relief from intermittent strikes and intolerable wrongs that paralyze industry.

FORD VS. WALL STREET

Back of all this is a long and complex story. Ford has reason to hate Wall street. Years ago when he was far from being the power he is today and yet was bothering other automobile makers by his sales methods and the cheapness of his car, an eastern money man schemed to get Ford in his clutches. He loaned $500,000 to Ford in two installments of $250,000 each and then endeavored to get Ford to raise the price of his cars, limit production and enter into agreement with other automobile manufacturers. When Ford refused, the banker demanded payment of the money and threatened to throw him into bankruptcy. Much to his surprise Ford paid. The man of the Tin Lizzie had not used a cent of the borrowed money. He had suspected the eastern man from the start and merely played with him.

Ford never forgets or forgives.

So, too, in the recent period of drastic inflation he had an experience that inflamed him. He needed money urgently. Much to his dislike he had to apply to Wall street. Aid was offered, but under terms and restrictions against which he rebelled. He turned from Wall street and, by a remarkable intensive selling campaign in which his agencies supported him magnificently, he got all the money he required to bridge him over the emergency.

That second experience added to his hatred of Wall Street.

FUEL TO THE FLAME

Recently in the coal strike, when the fuel of industrial establishments in the Lake States was running low, and hospitals, asylums and public institutions of Michigan were without coal, and the miners' union refused the Governor's plea to operate the few mines of Michigan to supply the hospitals and asylums, Henry Ford offered to furnish the men to dig the coal in idle mines in Kentucky if the Louisville and Nashville road would turn this fuel over to the Ford railroad, the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton. For some good reason the offer was declined. Ford ascribed the refusal to Wall street. He also ascribed various difficulties his railroad had with the Louisville and Nashville, and the Chesapeake and Ohio at junction points, to Wall street. He says the Louisville and Nashville is dominated by Wall street and this is how he explains it:

Years ago when the Rothschilds controlled the L. & N. August Belmont & Co. were their American agents. In the first decade of the present century there was a new issue of L. & N. stock. The offering was put on a bull market. L. & N. went up with the rest of the list. Around 115, August Belmont thought it was high enough and sold a large number of shares. Then, with the market still rising, he sold more and more.

PLAYING THE GAME

John W. Gates was in the flush of his activities at that time. He thought the bankers were selling more stock than they had in their possession and were figuring on delivering the new stock, which was not ready for issue. He was right. He and his coterie bought L. & N., in tremendous volume and when they had sufficient for his requirements, he demanded delivery. There were not enough shares available to cover the sales and there wouldn't be until the new issue came on the market. Gates had the stock practically cornered and was in control.

Then J. P. Morgan, the elder, stepped in. He didn't want Gates using the L. & N., to play ducks and drakes with the delicate railroad rate structure or to employ it for stock market juggling. He compelled Gates to retire from the field (of course with a huge profit) and then he took over Gates's holdings and, after getting them, he sold control of the L. & N. to Henry Walters, acting for the Atlantic Coast Line.

From that operation Henry Ford figures J. P. Morgan & Co. dominate L. & N., and it would be hard to make him believe that when the L. & N. or any other railroad turns a cold shoulder to Henry Ford it is not obeying orders direct from Wall Street. Therefore, he thinks the refusal of his offer in regard to mining coal in Kentucky for Michigan's use came from Wall Street. He has a decided faculty for making any fact fit his theory.

COSTLY SHUT DOWN

Big men have their silly seasons. Wall Street has its full quota of foolish persons with foolish notions. One big man of New York has come out with an indictment of Ford for shutting down his plant rather than pay what Ford declares to be "tribute to coal gougers." This big man declares Ford is punishing his innocent workers and the workers in plants supplying the Ford company while Ford does not lose a cent.

In taxes, overhead and various other items every day of idleness probably costs the Ford Company $100,000.

One of the great sources of loss in American industry is due to the fact that too many men are ruled not infrequently by their emotions and not by their minds.

GERMAN SHIN PLASTERS

W. A. Briggs, president of the W. A. Briggs Bitumen Company, writing at some length and in detail regarding the financial demoralization of Germany, says the currency has been doubled seven times.

Correct.

But the mere statement that something has been doubled seven times does not carry to the reader the magnitude of such an operation. An illustration must be given to drive the German lesson home. Here it is:

In July, 1914, when the World War started, the note circulation of the Imperial Bank of Germany was 1,890,603,000 marks.

Sept. 9, 1922, it was 251,783,991,000 marks.

It had been doubled a little more than seven times. Here roughly is an example of what "doubling" means, when carried out in the manner Mr. Briggs suggests:

1,890,000,000
3,780,000,000
7,560,000,000
15,120,000,000
30,240,000,000
60,480,000,000
120,960,000,000
241,920,000,000

The last total is near enough in the present calculation to fit the case.

At the base of this pyramid there is a gold holding of about 1,000,000,000 marks, or less than $250,000.

At the present time Germany is issuing paper money at the rate of more than 2,000,000,000 marks a day, or more, each twenty-four hours, than was the total note issue of the Imperial Bank in 1914.

APPLYING AN IDEA

The Japanese may be great people for copying others, but they are not lacking in originality. This is brought out strongly by Isaac F. Marcosson in his articles in the Saturday Evening Post. Nearly two centuries ago—and that is, perhaps, a century in advance of England or America—a Japanese merchant established his retail business on the cash-and-one-price basis. Today that house is one of the largest in its line in the world. The writer tells us, too, of a Japanese who worked as a servant in California, who went back to Japan and started a drug store on the plan of the American drug store, with ice cream, soda water and such attendants, and now has chain stores, which remind you of what America boasts. Now this Japanese is to add cafeterias to his drug stores.

What, perhaps, is most impressive to the reader is not only the success of the Japanese retail merchant who does business on a cash basis, but the transformation wrought in the habits of a people rooted through centuries in the custom of long-time credit in their purchases.

STEERS ARE STRONG; BEEF MARKET WEEK

CONTINUED SHORTAGE IN FAT CATTLE NOTED BY WEEKLY LIVE-STOCK REVIEW

The weekly live-stock review issued yesterday by the local Federal-State Bureau states that in spite of a continued weak tone in the fresh beef trade, the market for steers on the hoof is strong. The report follows in full:

That a shortage of fat cattle exists on the Pacific Coast became more apparent this week, when Los Angeles packers invaded northeastern Montana and even went as far as the Denver market in order to supply their coolers with good beef. Several noteworthy sales of local cottonseed meal-fed steers were made this week. The $8 mark was reached several times on fat steers, delivered off cars at Los Angeles.

"A string of seventy-nine good cottonseed meal-fed steers, averaging 1005 pounds, sold in a local feed lot at $8 with four head out at $7. A string of 117 steers, which had been on feed a comparatively short time in local yards and were only of medium quality, brought $7.25. These averaged 910 pounds. Earlier in the week, a San Diego county cattleman sold four cars of 980-pound Angus steers at $8 and four cars of 930-pound spayed heifers at $6, delivered off cars at Los Angeles. Sales of good steers continue to be made at the ranch at $6.75 to $7, with common and medium stock down to $5.50 to $6.50. Three cars of good cows were sold Tuesday, f. o. b. ranch, Imperial county, at $5.

"A very broad demand exists for feeders and further strength in prices has resulted. A spread of $5.50 to $6 is buying a good many feeder strings in California, Arizona and Nevada. However, it is now difficult to buy any thin steers, carrying desirable breeding quality, under $6 to $6.25 in nearby California points. There is still a considerable number of thin steers available in Arizona and some sales of Southern Arizona feeder steers were made this week as low as $5 to $5.50. It is reliably reported that good feeder steers are costing $6, weighed off cars at El Paso, Tex.

"Calves—There is a better tone to the calf market at this weekend as killers have managed to get rid of the surplus which caused the big slump in the market two weeks ago. No price improvement is yet noticeable, $8 to $8.50 taking the best 150 to 200-pound vealers, delivered off cars here. Heavy calves continue to sell at the usual discounts.

Hogs—Hog prices worked higher this week and California grain fed porkers met a better reception. The reaction was due partly to the higher market in the East, as well as to the reduced supplies in Texas and Oklahoma. Good and choice 160 to 200-pound grain-fed California hogs late in the week went from $10.75 to $11.25, with 210 to 250-pound averages from $10.25 to $10.75. Outlet for heavy hogs continues very narrow and uneven.

"The majority of hogs now being slaughtered are coming from outside the State, mainly from Nebraska and Oklahoma and shipments west from the Missouri River markets to Los Angeles will start soon.

Sheep and Lambs—An active outlet continues to prevail for both fat and thin lambs. Recent advances in both fat lamb and feeder lamb values in the East have diverted Nevada, Arizona, and Oregon lambs from the Pacific Coast. A range of $10.50 to $11.25 is taking the bulk of fat lambs, f. o. b. country points with prices, delivered off cars at Los Angeles, $12.50 to $13.00."

EUROPE HOLDS KEY TO FUTURE

Continental Countries Are Commercially Timid

Wheat is Solace for Many Woes; Money Rate

BY C. B. EVANS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH ;
[Copyright, 1922, Public Ledger.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Persons who were recently talking lustily a boom in business during the fall of 1922 now speak of 1923. Allowance must be made for them on account of the strikes that have interrupted the course of business. It will take yet much time to restore equipment of many kinds of its former efficiency. We are doubtlessly getting along quite as well as could be expected, noting especialy the rapid handling of coal by the railroad companies.

We have had enough experience of the vicissitudes of life in the past eight years to be forewarned against anything that may happen. These obstacles to prosperity are a continuing evil. Chiefly the Old World is responsible. No sooner does Lloyd George get through diplomatizing with Poincare, than he has to meet Kemal and in the case of that individual he makes his gestures with the implements of war, which renders the situation more menacing than any we have had recently.

There is no denying that the average observer considers the position of affairs today extremely acute and liable to have large effects in the United States. True, increased consumption—if it comes—of our commodities in Europe will compensate for the shock to all world affairs and especially to this country, which looks upon human activities as properly constructive rather than destructive.

PROCEED WITH CAUTION

Accordingly one sees in this city business men hesitating in their operations, and especially is it noted that speculators who have long been loyal to the idea of a revival in trade are selling their stocks in whole or in part. As one of them put it today, "there has been enough rise in stocks to discount our future prosperity fully." This has been said many times before, but of course, some time it will prove true. Then the commentator goes on to ask "can the rest of the world go on in this way without hurt to us?" The spirit that answers this is a bit weak. It says "what has that to do with the next eighth on my stock?"

It is this man of the moment that is buying stocks now. He has been the winner all the way along. The far off thing does not appeal to him. It did appeal to those who in the depths of 1921 bought stocks heavily and are now reaping profits or holding for still larger winnings.

The rise in money to 6 per cent in New York on Thursday has created quite an impression here. The money rate is the one thing on which the speculator is most touchy, for it is the money rate that has made the prices which now show him such good profits. The lift in New York is said to have been due largely to borrowing for the payment of duties incident to the change in the tariff from a temporary to a permanent basis. This looks like an inadequate explanation, especially in view of the huge quantities of sur-

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Stock prices moved to higher ground in today's brief half-holiday session, largely in response to short covering operations.

Speculative interests who had sold for the decline, apparently were disinclined to remain uncovered over the week-end in view of the more favorable situation in the Near East, early developments of which were used as an excuse for bear attacks. Trading was more moderate.

Gulf States Steel was the individual feature, being pushed up to a net gain of more than 4 points. Much of the recent buying has been attributed to a group of Birmingham bankers and the bullish operations have been aided by the limited floating supply for trading purposes.

Standard Oil of New Jersey was pushed up to a new high and good gains were recorded by Mexican Petroleum, Associated Oil, Houston and Phillips Petroleum. Rails advanced with the rest of the list but gains were generally within a radius of one point.

Equipments were among the features in the industrial group, American Car, Baldwin and Pullman each improving a point or more. Steels and coppers were virtually unchanged, but Joseph Lead advanced 1¼ in response to higher prices and improved trade conditions. Sears-Roebuck, Corn Products and Ajax Rubber stood out in the specialty list. Total sales approximated 346,000 shares.

A slightly firmer tone prevailed in the foreign exchange market but the volume of business was small. The clearinghouse statement showed an increase of $59,000 in loans, discounts and investments, as compared with an increase of $13,710,000 the week before, but the reserve of member banks in the Federal Reserve Bank decreasd $69,246,000 and net demand deposits decreased $63,431,000. The aggregate reserve was $559,377,000, or $60,804,610 below that of last week.

PUTS & CALLS

Was talking to a big trader on Friday and casually said, "Buying them or selling them?" To which he replied, "The art of trading in stocks is to buy when they are down and sell them when they are up. I am going to accumulate Steel, Baldwin, Beth "B," Wool and Studebaker." "How long do you expect to hold your stock?" I asked. "A couple of weeks," he replied, and added, "By the way, I want Calls on all these—it's the cheapest and safest way to trade."

Phone, write or call for booklet, "Guaranteed Puts and Calls"—It tells what they are, how they operate, etc.

Prompt attention to mail orders.

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

The usual Saturday calm settled over yesterday's session of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange and while trading held up in fairly good volume, important price changes were lacking. General Petroleum was one point higher at 115 and Union of California advanced 2½ to 177½. Mining stocks were strong and advances of ½ to 2 cents were scored by Oatman United and Telluride, respectively. Southern California Edison common was firm at 108.

Following are the closing prices and sales as posted yesterday in the Stock Exchange Building:

Would 25% to 40% Interest You?

If you had your money invested in an absolutely safe security earning a good rate of interest and found that by putting in an additional $5.00 for each $200.00 so invested you would increase your interest 25% to 40% would you do it? Indeed you would.

A company ably directed by well known bankers are doing just that and want you to share their success with them.

This Is an Oil Advertisement
By ABNER DAVIS

Great Gusher Due In Next Ten Days

Full 100% Dividend Returrr Guaranteed From First Net Returns From Oil

100% Cash in Bank Guarantee of Money Return If You Want It After You See the Great Gusher Flowing Profits Come in at Signal Hill.

From your best friend—One Question—

—Tell me what you would do if your best friend said to you:

"Loan me One Hundred Dollars today. I will give you collateral security good for every dollar.

"I will invest this money where I know it will be safe; where I know I will soon get a hundred, two hundred, five hundred or a thousand per cent in dividends.

"I will pay you back your hundred dollars and then divide the profits?"

If you thought your friend knew what he was talking about, and if your friend offered you a Government bond as security, would you take his offer?

Now if you followed me in this attempt to illustrate and make plain this unusual, unheard-of idea, I will lay the exact proposition before you, which is much better than the above hypothetical question.

I will hand you a certificate of deposit on any bank in the city you may designate, payable to you on demand by the bank.

You may hand me your money of equal amount.

You and I both sign the application reserving the interest in oil you want.

You now have the promise of the bank to pay, which is absolutely and positively good. You alone can draw the money out of the bank.

I have your money, so we both are even, right where we started.

Except you have secured my promise to do something more for you, because you have proven to me that you are able to take the next step if you care to do so.

I have given you an option, an agreement by which I say to you: "If this oil well that is almost ready to come in comes in a gusher I am going to let you in on it the minute I know it is a sure winner."

After I know, and after you investigate and know all the facts, I agree to let you exchange your Bank Certificate of Deposit for its face value in Guaranteed 100% Dividend Return Preferred Shares of the El Paso Pacific Oil Syndicate. You are guaranteed a return of 100% from the profits of oil on each share. Then you let one-half of your profits remain for further investments to earn more profits with which to pay you more and larger dividends.

I believe this one well will return the money from its stream of flowing oil in a very, very short time. In the meantime your initial investment and a part of your profits—a part of the oil produced—is again placed at work for you.

You become a part of a big, strong, going organization accomplishing results for you from profit earnings, and under my plan you got in after all the risk had been taken—when a cinch was already cinched.

I am going to invite you to see the well start its flow of liquid wealth. I am going to let you see how much money it will make for each hundred dollars that may be invested.

I am talking to you about the El Paso Pacific Oil Syndicate, home office, suite 925, L. A. Stock Exchange Building, Los Angeles, organized, owned and managed by a group of leading citizens of Los Angeles.

I am talking to you about a well at Signal Hill, drilled to the top of the greatest, thickest gusher oil sand on earth. The casing has been set and cemented and will be drilled in within ten days. Then oil profits will begin to flow and you may expect oil dividends to begin for you by the end of the month.

I am talking to you about a company that also owns a well already in production in the Huntington Beach gusher field, in addition to the Signal Hill well, and which also owns a great "Wildcat" well down 2000 feet and now gassing on one of the great geological structures of Texas.

I am talking to you about a company which, under the Pre-Merger Plan proposes to drill a test well on a great block of acreage described in square miles of potential gusher oil territory in Lower California.

I am talking to you about a California organization backed by the wealth and brains of men who are "among the peers" of this country.

Read the names of these men. If you don't know them inquire who they are, look them up, and then you will be able to realize what kind of an organization will handle your money, produce oil for you, and pay you your share of dividends as earned.

This organization stands in a class by itself for property holdings, actual oil well ownership and future operations, quick action, quick returns. And the men at the head of affairs in this great organization are men whom you can trust in every way and depend upon to give you a square deal.

Here are the names of these men. Read them and then look these men up if you do not already know them:

Hon. William J. Pearson, president of the company, is a California rancher and is interested in oil and other developments in this state.

Judge Rex B. Goodcell, treasurer, is one of the most prominent and influential citizens of California. He is the present United States Collector of Internal Revenue, handling enormous sums of Uncle Sam's money every year. It is safe to say that he is a safe treasurer for the El Paso Pacific Oil Syndicate.

Among the other officers and trustees and large shareholders of the El Paso Pacific Oil Syndicate are Edward D. Zehner, chief appraiser of the State Banking Commission of California; Charles W. McQuigg, who has been in the mercantile business in Los Angeles for twenty years; Judge Rufus C. Porter, a prominent attorney; R. E. Burke, widely known and experienced oil operator, and Harry William Elliot, also a prominent Los Angeles attorney, secretary of the company.

Here, read this. This is the best evidence that you can get that these men are dealing 100% fair with the investing public. The following resolution, which gives you a guarantee never given before, is backed by the integrity of the men guiding the affairs of the El Paso Pacific Oil Syndicate.

Read this resolution, which was adopted by the Board of Trustees on Sept. 20:

> "In line with the policy of the Company to insure the investing public the greatest safety and profit and the paying of the 100% dividend return on the Preferred Shares as quickly as possible, the right to receive dividends on the Preferred Shares received for property in the formation of this Company, held and owned by the officers and trustees of this Company, this Board of Trustees unanimously agrees to and does hereby waive any and all rights to preference dividends until the Preferred Shares purchased and owned by the public shall have received the full 100% dividend return."

This is protecting the investor in a way that means REAL PROTECTION. Act now. Come to our office and receive your bank Certificate of Deposit.

If for any reason you cannot come in today, fill out the Coupon below and mail it TODAY.

METAL MARKETS

Market Review

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Railroads have been active buyers of steel rails and repair materials but otherwise the demand for steel has slowed up somewhat on account of increasing production. The question of transportation is very uncertain, however, and the market as a whole is much unsettled with buyers calling for steel on old orders. Pig-iron production is increasing and buyers are more disposed to limit orders to small lots and await developments.

Copper has been steady. An improved export demand is shown in the sales to Great Britain, France and Germany. Only a moderate business for domestic consumption has occurred, but with little metal offering for resale, the market has held well up to the 14-cent level. Notwithstanding the increase in South American production the statistical position is believed to be strengthening, although trade authorities here say that the reduction in stocks for the present will be less pronounced than during July and August. Tin was firmer with consumers disposed to secure part of their requirements, due to firmness abroad and in lead.

Lead was marked up to 6.10 by the leading producers, while spot metal sold as high as 6.25 in an effort by consumers to fill requirements.

Zinc showed further strength and consumers are showing some concern about future supplies. The leading smelter has advanced wages and mines are said to be running close to maximum, with a good demand for ore.

Antimony was firm and higher. There was a good demand before the new tariff became effective.

We have the original of these genuine letters of praise sent to our Master Writer, W. C. Cunningham, who is acknowledged by many as the most forceful writer of honest money-getting sales literature in America.

Send your letter and let this powerful writer perfect the prospectus and sales letters for your capital-raising campaign.

Mr. W. C. Cunningham,
Los Angeles, Calif.

July 26th, 1922.

Dear Sir:

"I have sold over five million dollars worth of stock by mail, have satisfied the public and I am now perfecting plans to startle a legion of people with what I believe will develop into an unparalleled and stupendous commercial success.

I consider you the ablest financial writer of business literature and mail order sales letters in the United States.

Your past efforts and strong co-operation for my companies, and the powerful sales literature you have written for me, have been most satisfactory.

Your extraordinary ability in perfecting and safeguarding mail order literature makes you 100% efficient and the leader in your line in this country.

I have seen and read many of the hundreds of letters you receive from investors who write you for guidance and who ask you to recommend money-making opportunities to them. Your advertising, inducing investors to write for your guidance, enables you to supply what I consider a certain class of the most valuable names of investors possible to obtain.

Your various methods of collecting names of prospective investors of all classes of people in all sections of the United States, opens up possibilities for those seeking capital quickly, at small cost by your plan, unequalled to any other method I have ever known in all my rich experience dealing with investors and the public.

I most heartily recommend you and your service and plan to any legitimate company seeking quick financing at small cost. I consider you the world's best and will soon consult you on the greatest of all new financing campaigns."

Name and address upon request.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

We take pleasure endorsing the J. E. Bennett Financing Sales Service of this city as an organization complete in every detail, extremely well fitted to render a most valuable service to companies needing large capital.

We personally know all the men connected with this enterprise possess exceptional business ability and are men of high standing in the business world. Their extraordinary success in satisfying customers needing capital and their legion of pleased clients give every assurance of their ability to render a most valuable service.

The success they have had with the Cunningham plan, which has brought so many letters of praise from satisfied clients, and their good fortune in retaining the services of W. C. Cunningham, the master writer of forceful literature, should satisfy the most skeptical that they are indeed in an enviable position enabling enterprises to increase their capital by the easily operated Cunningham plan.

We are always willing to extend a liberal credit to this organization as they have a reputation of paying all bills promptly, and we learn their standing at the banks and among business organizations of this city is A-1. We can recommend them highly as able and willing to satisfy all who have business dealings with them.

Yours truly,

Gentlemen:

Referring to Mr. W. C. Cunningham, Financing Specialist, of your city, and what he has done for our Company, we are pleased to state that his work for us has been extremely satisfactory and all the sales literature he prepared for our use is very high class and contains the vital, impelling, logical reasoning so necessary for success.

We have sold over two hundred thousand dollars' worth of our stock by mail, and are certainly grateful for Mr. Cunningham's splendid efforts and strong co-operation for our Company.

Regarding the matter of cost, it is believed that the proper mail order plan put into operation should enable any reliable company with a high-class proposition to sell their securities at a cost of between twelve and fifteen per cent.

If you desire any further information regarding Mr. Cunningham, whom we consider 100% efficient in his special line of work, we suggest that you write him direct.

Yours very truly,
E. O. GLENN.

Dear Sir:

Our success following your plan has been entirely satisfactory, and I herewith enclose you check for $500.00 and wish to extend my own and the company's warm appreciation of your splendid efforts in our behalf.

The names you supply of real investors who have written you that they have money to put into good securities are invaluable, and their inquiries to you prove that they are earnestly seeking legitimate money-making opportunities.

The masterful prospectus and sales literature which you perfected for our use received our critical attention and met our unqualified approval.

Your exceptional way of safe-guarding each and every line of sales matter, and the forceful punch you put behind every paragraph, is convincing proof, in our case at least, that it pays to deal with an expert, who is 100% efficient in your special line of work.

Our success through your splendid efforts and your entire organization is gratifying indeed, and we cannot recommend you and your plan too highly to any company that has a legitimate proposition to present to the public.

Gratefully yours,

SUGAR PRICES

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Raw sugar was quiet and no sales reported, prices remaining unchanged at 3 cents for Cubas, cost and freight, equal to 4.77 for centrifugal.

Trading in raw sugar futures was light and prices advanced 3 to 4 points early on scattered covering but soon eased off under liquidation, and were finally unchanged from the previous night. Closing: October, 3.05; December, 3.19; March, 3.06, and May, 3.17.

In refined most of the local refineries were closed and there was little business reported. Prices were unchanged at 6.25 for fine granulated. Futures, refined, nominal.

Grain Market Reacts Under Heavy Selling

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—General evening-up for over the week-end and the less warlike news from abroad resulted in heavy selling of all grains. The close was well toward the low point. Wheat finished with a net loss of 2⅛ to 2¼ cents, while corn was off ⅝ to 1⅛ cents, oats ¼ to ⅜ cent and rye 1⅛ to 1⅜ cents. Provisions were stronger with packers buying lard and the finish was 5 to 25 cents higher with ribs up 10 to 62½ cents.

The best upturn in prices in a long time was witnessed this week. A war scare, coming at a time when sentiment had been very bearish for several months, resulted in the advance of 9⅛ to 11⅞ cents on wheat from last week's low point. It brought 4 to 4⅜ cents rise in corn. While the bulge was not maintained, due to more peaceful reports, wheat gained 4 to 5½ cents net, while corn was up ⅜ to 1⅛ cents, oats ⅝ to 2⅜ cents and rye ¼ cent lower to 1⅜ cents higher for the week.

A marked improvement in the export and domestic demand for lard caused a sharp upturn. Closing traders were at net gains of 22½ to 55 cents, while ribs gained 10 to 60 cents.

General selling by longs was on in wheat early today, with the opening sales showing 3½ cents under the close of the previous day, September leading. Stop-loss orders were caught on the way down and it was not until December was under $1.05½ that any material support was found. Bulk of the trading at the start in December was between $1.05½ and $1.06, and the greater part of the day's business was around these figures. Houses that were the leading sellers of the previous day were the best buyers on the break.

Export demand was reported as quiet and the firmness in premiums at Winnipeg was due to buying to fill an old export sale. There was sufficient uneasiness over the Near East situation to prevent local traders from taking the bear side in an active manner.

Corn and oats were affected by the action of wheat and ranged lower, closing well toward the bottom. Trade was mainly of a local character. Country offerings to arrive were the smallest of the week with premiums on spot corn about ¼ cent lower as compared with September. Shipping demand was fair.

plus money the banks of New York have recently shown in their statements.

Wheat comes forward to give us solace for many woes. That commodity has been a creeping child for some weeks and has met with many obstacles on the floor of the Chicago Board of Trade. It is more promising now but we still have the poverty of Europe to contend with and also good crops in parts of the world competing with us, notably Canada. And any war likely to be waged in Europe will not be large enough to call on us for a quantity of our products at all comparable with the shipments during the war of 1914-1918.

EUROPE LACKS NERVE

The Danske Landmandsbank of Copenhagen, which failed and then recovered this week, makes a fair showing to the world today. The rescue came through a subscription of 100,000,000 kroner by the National Bank and the government of Denmark. This is expressed in the form of a preferred stock. The old capital is reduced from 100,000,000 to 20,000,000 kroner. Banks in this city which have had relations with this institution for many years express confidence in its future. The trouble with it, as with many concerns in the United States, was failure to charge off large losses.

The rest of Continental Europe in the main has shown a similar lack of nerve. The business of that part of the world is a shell with not too much inside of it. Let us hope the European countries will not all try to liquidate at once. There would be a world smash without precedent, and the breaking waves would dash high on the rockbound coast of the United States.

ORANGES

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 23.—The market on Valencia oranges has presented an even tone the past week. Fancy fruit meets with ready sale at average prices ranging from $10.50 to $13.55 per box. Sizes 176s and larger continue to command a premium over the smaller sizes. Poor stock, small sizes are becoming more difficult to dispose of now that the first of the Florida oranges for the new season are beginning to move. This class of Valencias has averaged as low as $2.75 per box in Eastern markets this week.

The shortage of refrigerator cars is interfering with the movement of Valencias. The shortage has become so acute that definite action has been taken whereby the Division of Markets of the State Department of Agriculture will take official charge of the car conservation program in this State, to the end that shippers holding cars over twenty-four hours for loading and unloading will be strictly called to account. Plans for keeping a check on all shippers and receivers have been formulated in order to expedite the release of refrigerator equipment.

Thousands of refrigerator cars are required to move the grape crop of the State during September and October after which the early crop of oranges from the central part of the State will be ready to move and will be followed by the citrus crop from Southern California. It will require the earnest co-operation of all interests to keep refrigerator cars moving.

F.o.b. quotations are on a basis of $8 to $9 per box, according to sizes and district.

There are no new developments pertaining to the new crop of oranges now maturing.

LEMONS

The market on lemons is strong and higher. With very little fruit in storage and light picks in prospect for the next few months there is every indication that the short lemon supply due to the frost will be more apparent during the fall and early winter months than at any other season of the year.

The supply of California lemons has held up close to the estimates made immediately following the frost in January when it was predicted that California would have available the usual quantity of lemons for spring and summer shipments.

With a steady winter and spring demand at good prices, shipments went forward in volume and up to September 1 were ahead of any previous season except last year when approximately 1000 more cars were shipped in the same period.

F.o.b. quotations are on a basis of $7.50 to $8 per box on best grades.

There are on hand and available for sale within the next thirty days approximately 30,300 boxes of foreign lemons.

Notwithstanding the cool summer and lack of usual summer demand for lemons occasioned by hot weather, foreign lemon imports have been greater than in recent years.

WEEKLY FINANCIAL REVIEW

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—While the Turkish war scare and higher money rates were used as an excuse for two sharp reactions in the stock market this week, which carried some of the leaders one to three points below last week's levels, opinion was quite general that the declines were precipitated by a weakened technical condition. It was largely a "traders' market" with no extensive outside participation.

Developments in the Near East naturally caused some concern, but the behavior of the markets reflected the financial community's belief that the trouble would be settled by diplomacy rather than on the battlefield. Domestic developments continued favorable, the heavy bituminous production of coal enabling a number of industries to increase production while good progress is being made in the movement of anthracite coal.

The railroad shopmen's strike has faded into the background and is no longer causing any serious concern. The moderate revival of business is also reflected in the steady increase in car loadings and the increase in Federal reserve notes in actual circulation. Motor car dealers are beginning to feel the seasonal dullness, but it has been pronounced as yet.

Commodity prices are still tending upward. The war scare proved an important factor in wheat prices this week, but it had an unfavorable effect on the cotton market, which was unsettled. The heavy demand for funds by importers, who were anxious to get their goods out of bond in order to get the benefit of the lower tariff duties, was partly responsible for the firmer tone in the call money market. Thursday's closing rate of 6 per cent was the highest since last February. Seasonal demand for funds also caused a hardening of the rates for time money and commercial paper.

Interest in the military developments in the Near East has temporarily overshadowed the troublesome German reparations question. Raising of the Berlin rediscount rate to 8 per cent and another increase of more than 19,000,000,000 marks in circulation, however, attracted some attention here. Acute weakness of sterling exchange indicates that most of the purchases being made in this country for foreign account were being financed with British bills.

FINE BUILDING AT BURBANK COMPLETED

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

BURBANK, Sept. 23.—The new Graham-Haefner Building has just recently been completed and occupied. It is an attractive building, constructed of terra cotta brick with trimmings of lighter color. It is simple in design, but displays in every detail the unusually excellent workmanship which has been done upon it. Morris W. Fowler, architect and contractor of Hollywood and a cousin of A. R. Graham, designed the building and had the general contract.

The building will be occupied by Mr. Graham and his brother-in-law, Mr. Haefner who will move to Burbank this fall, for their real estate office; the office and waiting room of the Original Stage Line and by another party not definitely decided upon. The second story has been leased by Mrs. Lydia W. Darms of Hollywood, who has it completely furnished for a high-class hotel. The cost of the building was approximately $30,000.

THAT 4000 BARREL PAY

Folks, we hit the oil sand in Well No. 2 at 3853 feet and are cementing it off today.

Well No. 1, just 60 feet off the oil sand now; it will also be standing cemented in a couple of days.

In two weeks I will show you two of the greatest producers you ever laid an eye on, and don't forget that every 30 days as long as they produce the bank will pay you yours.

Don't forget you still have an opportunity to come in with me on my two wells on my six acre lease just 1300 feet west of my Brunson property, and let me tell you here and now, I expect to drill in two more beauties here. Take it from me it's the "Soup's Potatoes."

Here it is in a nut-shell, figure it out, then jump in the old hack, drive out to Santa Fe Springs and look it over for yourself, and I feel that you will agree with me that it's nothing short of the "Pigeon's Pajamas."

Six acres, the purchase price of which was $30,000, and 28% royalty to the land owner. I take 12% and give you 60% or 60 barrels out of every 100 that these two wells ever produce. Your 60% is divided into 3500 equal parts and for every $100 you shoot I issue to you direct an assignment legally executed of 1-3500 part of this production. I have appointed one of our leading banks as trustee for you, to collect every 30 days, direct from the pipe line company that takes my oil run, and pay it out pro rata as your different interests appear on their books. Leave it to me. I have your protection "Air-Tight."

If you feel like placing a bet where you are sure they will cash your ticket if your horse wins, shoot it to me now, for I'm about to leave the Barrier.

Mail it in today or run in and meet me, for the judges are not going to hold up this race much longer.

—Barrington Says—

In my message to you yesterday I referred to the blister pearl and the manner in which it was formed. Today I wish to draw your attention to another kind of Pearl, the Pearl milady wears in her necklace and on her fingers. This pearl, beautiful and lustrous, is constructed around a tiny grain of sand which in some manner has secreted itself in the oyster shell. The oyster covers this tiny grain of sand with its own secretion and gradually increases it more and more, and, turning it over and over, produces the round beautiful lustrous Pearl—the Pearl of commerce—the Pearl of wealth. But remember this Pearl has in its center a tiny grain of sand, the nucleus around which is built this beautiful Pearl of wealth.

Now compare the process of building a Pearl with the method of a finance company. The financial company treats your money in the same manner the oyster treats the grain of sand. It is built upon, added to, turned over and over as is the grain of sand, and all the time it is growing larger and larger, more beautiful and more lustrous. Now then this metaphorical Pearl is complete, we hand it to our stockholders as their dividend, the earning from their grain of sand.

Communicate with us if you have a few dollars to invest and learn of our plan of operation.

What Is Money Worth?

A prominent business man said:

"Money is a business tool—and nothing more. Translate money into terms of what it will buy and you have the real value for figuring its worth. If the investment of $500,000 will make for you $1,000,000, you can afford to pay out $250,000 to the man who furnishes you with the money; he is entitled to a reasonable profit on the tool which he sells you for your use."

Which is better, pay the price at which you can secure money and make a profit on it, or refuse to pay such price and lose the profit?

The price of money is simply a question of supply and demand. The price of merchandise and everything else is governed in the same way. We cannot get away from it no matter how many laws are placed on the statute books.

Many large concerns openly offered usurious rates, as high as 10% and more, for plain loans during the war period. They got it—and saved themselves and their Creditors and possibly the Creditors of their Creditors, and so on down—otherwise this country might have experienced a most disastrous panic.

Give us a sum, probably less than the discount you offer your Customers, and let us buy their accounts when they won't discount them. Does it matter materially whether you have their Cash or ours if you pay us no more for the money than you offer them to discount—and the essential difference is that we will buy their Accounts when they won't discount them.

An Investment Opportunity

An established brokerage firm of high standing, having offices in most prominent Los Angeles office building, has secured what is believed to be the best oil lease yet put over in the famous Santa Fe Springs field.

They are now rounding out their organization and will start drilling operations within sixty days. Lease, conditions and requirements are perfect, production and dividends are assured. Their prestige as brokers removes this from the wild-cat promotional class.

To one or two reliable parties who can invest three to five thousand dollars, there is an opportunity on a pre-organization basis here that must actually be seen to be believed. It won't be available more than a few days. Complete particulars, without obligation, by addressing F, Box 366, TIMES BRANCH.

RANDSBURG and Precious Metals

The Rand Mining District, located in Kern and San Bernardino Counties, State of California, is today the World's greatest vari-mineralized section of known performance.

It has one Gold mine that has produced approximately Twenty Million Dollars!

It has one Tungsten mine that has produced approximately Twenty Million Dollars!

It has one Silver mine that has produced over Six Million Dollars, with ore now blocked out having an estimated value of Eight Million Dollars and still going strong!—the wonder of the mining world and the greatest silver mine discovered in 20 years. Bakersfield people—every-day folks—got nearly a million dollars in dividends from this mine in the last 12 months. A chambermaid at the Southern Hotel here, a girl stenographer, a druggist, an editor, a rancher and many others got rich!

It has numerous other mines and is today being prospected probably as no other camp in the world is being prospected.

Given, then, this high mineralization in an empire covering approximately 35,000 square miles—given the year 1922, when the American people have learned to go about business on the grandest scale of operations known since the Morning of the World, and you have super-potentiality! You have expectation de luxe! Locked in the future of Randsburg, the narrow vision of today widens out on a vista whose extended horizons encompass the limits of imagination in golden wealth!

Mizpah-Nevada Now—20c

Here is an issue, incorporated under the laws of the State of California, capably officered and managed, with shaft now being sunk less than 2000 feet from the BIG silver mine—the California Rand, as it is called—issued capitalization less than $200,000, which is, in our opinion, the camp's best buy with a view to early profit-taking. We have sold this stock to 140 of our clients in and around Bakersfield. It is going strong and an early rise can be expected. All orders at the above price, subject to confirmation. Reasonable time payments allowed. As specialists in Randsburg stocks, we have no hesitancy in recommending this issue at the price. Read the coupon at the bottom, fill out and mail with all or part payment. Your money back in ten days if dissatisfied after getting ALL the facts. Twenty dollars buys 100 shares—$200 buys 1000 shares.

Market Letter and Map FREE

Now practically ready for distribution after tedious and painstaking care. Write for it. Keep in touch with the marvelous progress of this fabulous camp through the pioneer big firm. References, any bank or commercial agency in Bakersfield.

BOND QUOTATIONS

Bond Trading Quiet

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Trading in the bond market was quiet and irregular today with few marked changes.

Foreign bonds, as a rule, was steady. Anton Jurgens 6s were fairly active, being pushed up 1¾, while Soissons 6s fell back over a point, but other changes were unimportant. Indianapolis Union Railway 5s ordinary inactive, advanced nearly 2 points, but Chicago and Alton 3s, St. Paul convertible 4½s and Great Northern 4¼s relatively backward. Strength of Brooklyn Union Gas 7s and Saks & Co. 8s were the outstanding development in the industrial and public utility lists. Liberty bond 3s were mixed. Total sales, par value, were $9,710,000.

The market for new offerings continued to be good, the week's total reaching nearly $75,000,000.

Says-- Signal Hill to Santa Fe Springs

SIGNAL HILL . . . . I'm Signal Hill!

SANTA FE . . . . Howdy! I'm Santa Fe Springs!

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Mighty glad to know you! You're a BIG LEAGUE OIL FIELD—north, south, ea and west!

SANTA FE . . . . Not quite in your class yet, though. Those 100,000 BARRELS you're putti into the tanks every day are certainly hanging up a record! I understand you are making an average of 1088.60 barrels per well—a record never before equaled.

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Well, you're pretty fast on my trail. With NEARLY 50,000 BARRELS a day, developed in ten months, you're some record breaker yourself—a half mile wi and a mile long, and I hear you've paid the Amalgamated Oil Company more th $400,000, the Petroleum Midway nearly $200,000 in four months, and the Shell Company more than $350,000 in two months. From one well alone you yielded the Uni Oil Company almost $1,750,000.

SANTA FE . . . . How is your oil holding out? Are your wells standing up?

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Are they standing up! Why, man, they get BIGGER. I started Petroleum Midway's fifty-fifty well at 2500 barrels a day and THEN RAISED THE ANTE TO MORE THAN 3000 BARRELS! I am turning out wealth at the rate of $10,000 an hour—$250,000 a day—$7,500,000 per month.

SANTA FE . . . . That's the way I think an oil field ought to act. What's the use of letting a bunch of re ular fellows drill a perfectly good well, give them a whale of a production to start wi and then throw them down by choking off their oil to a few hundred barrels? Not m I'm keeping my wells up to a production that I'll always be proud of.

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Too bad the price of oil dropped.

SANTA FE . . . . Didn't hurt me much. I'm turning out oil of a quality that brings a high price anyway. I AM WORTH A HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS! Just one of my lots, with a 5 foot front, brought more than $50,000.

SIGNAL HILL . . . . But have you heard the news—the REAL news? THE FOSTERS ARE GOING TO DRILL ON ME!

SANTA FE . . . . That's great—but don't get up-stage about it. THEY'RE GOING TO DRILL ON ME, TOO. They've picked two beautiful leases right over the biggest pool of oil I've got and I am certainly going to treat those boys right!

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Same here. They've done a lot of drilling down in Texas and I've heard oil me say a dozen times that the FOSTERS KNOW HOW TO DRILL A WELL and ma it pay the biggest earnings for their clients. They've got the money to drill and they've already started wells on two of the best leases I've got. And I'm here to tell you th they're going to get what is coming to them—two wonderful producers!

SANTA FE . . . . The thing I like about it is that when the Fosters drill wells A LOT OF PEOPLE ARE GOING TO GET THE BENEFIT. A lot of young fellows ar going to be able to go to college—a lot of girls and their mothers, too, are going t have plenty of the finest clothes they ever wore. Men are going to buy houses an have a bank account and take vacations and enjoy life with what they get when th follow the Fosters. THAT'S WHY I'M GOING TO GIVE THEM THE BEST I'VE GOT.

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Santa Fe, you're a good scout and I'm with you. I'VE MADE FORTUNES FOR OTHER CONCERNS AND I'LL BE MIGHTY GLAD TO DO JUST AS MUCH FOR THE FOSTERS AND THEIR CLIENTS.

SANTA FE . . . . The two leases the Fosters bought over my way were for their big syndicate CALIFORNIAN. Are yours?

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Yes, and besides our leases, Californian holds 44 acres in Athens-on-the-Hill and yo and I know—Signal Hill—THAT ATHENS-ON-THE-HILL IS ANOTHER OIL FIELD THAT IS GOING TO STARTLE THE WORLD.

SANTA FE . . . . The beauty of Californian is that although she holds five leases in three fields, h units cost only $100. And they buy a perpetual interest in a liberal share of all th oil that you and I and Athens-on-the-Hill will put out through all the wells that Californian will drill.

SIGNAL HILL . . . . Santa Fe, if you were up on top of old Mother Earth, WHAT WOULD YOU DO RIGHT NOW?

SANTA FE . . . . I'd get as much money down on California units as I could spare—and I'd get it down quick.

COUNTRY ESTATE.

Rarely does any realtor have an opportunity to offer a home such as this. It is distinctly individual among the vast number of beautiful homes in Southern California. The owner selected a picturesque site of 1½ acres, commanding a sweeping view of mountain tops, canyons, orange perfumed valley, city and sea, and following a long cherished plan, had built with the greatest care and by the best skill money could buy, a particularly inviting home of 9 gorgeous rooms, every one which carries a charm seldom seen. The great living-room, 53 feet long and the wide porches look out upon a panorama of landscape that is unexcelled. The wonderful sleeping chambers and the grandeur of view from their spacious windows and porches is entrancing. With the house completed, the owner began with noted landscape gardeners, and gradually there has been brought into being, at the cost of a fortune sunken and Japanese gardens that are without a peer. The unique waterfalls, natural stone bridges, miniature lakes, enticing footpaths, tea house and the costly imported shrubbery of many varieties are a delight to visitors, and tourists regard a visit to this garden as one of the attractions of a vacation in Southern California. Nothing has been left undone—no money has been spared, to make a home where the retired business man (or he who is still in the harness but can take things easy) can enjoy a magnificent city home, with every convenience, in the shadow of the mountains, and yet only a pleasing ride from Broadway over a perfect boulevard. A change in business plans places this show place on the market and it will be shown by appointment to the man or woman who can appreciate such a place and realize the money that has been spent to develop this beauty spot. Price $150,000. See O. S. Strain, Main 1238.

FOR SALE—
FURNISHED BUNGALOW COURT.
11 UNITS AND GARAGES.
This beautiful court is located on South Serrano and Girard St., half a block from Pico Boulevard, one block east of Western Ave. A perfect piece of rental property.

I hold a 10-year lease at $70 per unit per month, which is a total of $770 a month. The 7 front units rent for $125 and the 4 rear at $110 a month, or a total rental of $1315, leaving a net balance of $545 a month.

This court will be ready for tenants October 1. Owing to a change of business connections, I am willing to sell this lease and furniture at a price that will give the buyer a chance to make some money. No expense or care has been spared to make this court a GEM in its class, and I have bought furniture to match. I shall be pleased to show court and furnishings to those interested.

The price I am asking for this lease and furniture is $15,000.

Mr. Bigelow will be on the premises every day.

LISTEN FOLKS!
(THE WHYMAN WAY.)
Did you ever hear of townsite lots and 5 and 10-acre vineyard tracts being sold with a positive (security put in escrow) guarantee that if they do not double in value your money will be returned to you and still you keep the lots or vineyards or tracts as the case may be?
With every deed or contract that is issued to a purchaser goes with it a certificate or bond guaranteeing the return of each and every dollar if the lots or acreage sold does not double in value.
This certificate or bond is BACKED BY SECURITIES PLACED IN ESCROW. YOU ABSOLUTELY CANNOT LOSE.
We invite the most rigid investigation in this proposition we place before you.
If you are in the market to make money call at our office or write for descriptive folder and verify these statements.

WANT 10 TO 12 FAMILIES
For this wonderful subdivision.
Have 240 acres in the famous Shafter colony, just north of Bakersfield. Has more water developed than needed, about 300 inches. Three electric pumping plants, shallow lift, only about 28 feet. Located close to school. Practically all of the land has already been leveled, bordered and ditched, but responsible owner will put the entire 240 acres in perfect shape for irrigation, and also seed every acre to alfalfa with nurse crop of oats or barley, and subdivide the 240 acres into 12 tracts of 20 acres each and sell each 20-acre tract for $8000 on term of $800 cash, and balance in nine equal annual payments with 6 per cent interest. Price includes an equal proportionate interest in all the water which is ample for alfalfa or any crops, also includes seeding land to alfalfa this fall. Here is an excellent opportunity for a small colony. You will have to pay from $500 to $1000 per acre for land in good stand alfalfa in this district. Would consider selling as a whole on same terms and might consider some trade at actual cash value. Courtesy to agents.

FOR SALE—To people who love the big outdoors, hunting, fishing and the highest snow-covered mountains in the United States, we offer small improved or unimproved ranches of exceptional merit on very reasonable terms. There is an abundant supply of gravity water for irrigation from two trout streams flowing down from the melting snows of the high Sierra Nevada Mountains. Manzanar has an altitude of about 4000 feet, which gives a wonderful climate. The winters are a delightful change from summer. The soil is a sandy loam and grows fine pears, apples, grapes, vegetables and grain. The quality and flavor of the products are unsurpassed by anything in the State. Good school facilities available, also telephones, electricity and railroad. Property located on State highway at Manzanar in the Owens River Valley. Water is now piped to each tract of 16 to 20 acres.

FOR SALE—OR EXCHANGE—FARM LANDS
Don't you believe that right now is a pretty good time to try and unload some of that city property? Don't you believe that what has been is liable to occur again? Farm lands have been on the rocks long enough, and city property has been booming and bringing big prices. The time to buy either city property or farm land is when the other fellow is leaving it alone, and when it is down. There are a few far-sighted men who are taking advantage of the bargains offered today in farm lands, and when the prices get back to where they belong they may unload if not they will hold it for a good, safe, sound investment. Good farm land has an intrinsic value. Never goes out of date nor will it burn up. Have owned and handled Imperial Valley lands for 14 years.
For good buys in farm lands in Imperial and San Fernando Valley, see C. E. SPROUSE, 638 Cit. Nat. Bank Bldg. 14559.

FOR SALE—The best buy in the way of an orange grove I have ever offered. 15 acres, 10 acres navels 17 years old, 5 acres Valencias just bearing nicely. A beautiful bungalow, bath, toilet, electric lights, water piped to house and barn, good well, windmill, tank and house; garage for two cars and upstairs. Nice barn and chicken house. Family fruits. Only $17,500, worth $30,000 to anyone wanting a home. Also 30 acres, 10 acres navels and sweets, bal. Valencias, 20 yrs. old, in very best of condition and loaded with crop; best water system. Only $36,000 or will divide in 10-acre pieces. This place is worth $60,000, but other business makes it impossible for owner to look after property, so must sell. If you are looking for a real bargain, see me about these places. W. B. BAYLESS, 808 Central Bldg., 6th and Main.

AN OPPORTUNITY—
A well is being drilled for oil about 30 miles from Phoenix, Ariz., and is down 3300 feet. Is now being cemented to shut off water, and about to be drilled in. Several stratas of oil sand have been penetrated, and there is every indication of bringing in a real producer. What the first oil well in Arizona will mean can well be imagined. I hold a permit on two sections of 640 acres each which will be worth a fortune over night if the present well proves a winner which it has every indication of. One section of 640 acres is all I will need and I will transfer the other 640 or 160 or 80 out of it for $2.50 an acre. Can refer you to parties here who are familiar with the situation. If you are ready to chance a little money with a good prospect of making a fortune, this is your opportunity and you can't move too soon. Address L, box 153, TIMES OFFICE.

WOULD you like a real run for your money in the oil game? I am about to start developments on a splendid price of real government oil land located in the heart of thousands of wells here in California. Want few parties with $2500 upwards to help me put this over. I'll give you a share equal to almost 10 to 1 for your money, and pay you back your original investment with interest the first year. Address F, box 379, TIMES BRANCH.

ORANGE, LEMON WALNUT
Groves.

For Sale.

FOR SALE—
Some of the grandest orange groves ever offered for sale. Crops on these groves away above the average for this year. This is the chance of your life to get a fine grove, one of the best kind, the kind you'd be proud of for years. Nobody's throwing groves away. You don't want that kind anyhow.

No. 1667. No picture could show a better grove. 10 acres Navels and a few lemons, large fine, healthy trees. Big bearing kind. Big bearing surface. And such soil! 2 water rights, a beautiful modern country home. Every convenience. Belongs to an estate and must be sold. $40,000, ½ cash and 3 yrs. on balance. A mile above boulevard.

No. 1674. 10 acres, 7 Valencias, 3 Navels. $30,000. 2 water right. Big record to show you and verify. On Foothill Boulevard. Taxes $250. In best packing house. Gas, electric light and city water there. Excellent building spot. One of the biggest paying groves in the district. $15,000 cash and time.

No. 1672. 10 acres Navels, Valencias, few lemons, $30,000. Cheap water, good home in La Verne. Will take a $10,000 home if worth the money. A mile above Foothill Boulevard.

No. 1668. 7 acres, 4 Valencias, 3 Navels. $21,000. An immense water right, best and cheap. On paved street. Big payer. ½ cash and time.

No. 1675. 5 acres ½ Navels, ½ Valencias, $20,000. Excellent water right. Good modern bungalow, gas and elect. light, on paved street. Better than a great many 10-acre groves. Don't ask about these unless you are willing to buy the best the country affords.
A. W. RICHARDS,
The Orange Grove Man, Claremont.

FOR SALE—DO YOU WANT TO OWN THE FINEST ORANGE GROVE IN SO. CALIFORNIA, BAR NONE? STOP LOOKING AND INVESTIGATE THIS OPPORTUNITY. I am the owner of about 35-acre orange grove, located on the mountainside of Riverside. This grove has over 4000 orange trees, beautiful driveways, lawns, shrubbery and ornamental trees of every variety. Large lily and fish ponds. Has finest soil, water and climatic conditions in California. About 1200 ft. above sea level. Grove produced over 11,000 boxes of fruit last season, and has one of the largest crops to be found on any grove this year. I have put on about 50,000 cu. feet of dairy fertilizer and 40 tons of commercial fertilizer since last Jan. of this year, meaning that this grove is highly fertilized and cultivated. Have new Cleveland tractor and other implements. The attractive part of this grove is low upkeep; finest water rights in Cal., finest soil and, most of all, FREE FROM FROST. NO SMUDGING. Last year did not lose a single orange on account of heavy winter. The least you can say is this place is a paradise. Ideal country home with a handsome income. This place has 10-room, 2-story, modern house, barns, etc. City water for household purposes. All for the sum of $100,000. Part cash, balance mortgage or trade. Guarantee $25,000 crop on trees. Give it a look. MR. McCORMICK, Bryson Apts.

WANTED—AUCTION
REAL ESTATE
We want immediately, ten more homes, lots, ranches and investment properties to sell at public auction at our auction house, at 4506 S. Main St. On our cooperative plan we advertise your property for seven days for only $20, then on date advertised, we offer all properties in the order listed. Highest bid above the minimum price takes the property. This method is successful elsewhere, and is fair and business-like. This eliminates prohibitive advertising expense and the practice of fooling the public with booster.
Real estate is a staple commodity and in demand. We stimulate the market by bringing the seller and buyer together, in the quickest and best way. Call or write us today about the property you want to buy or sell. Yours for honest auctions.

FOR EXCHANGE—
INCOME $15,000 YEAR.
You'll want this place at sight.
We haven't a better income producer on our list and the price is absurdly low compared with the profits. We can deliver the lot, solid brick store and hotel building and all the furnishings, also good going pool, barber shop and soft drink business and price takes the pool tables, barber shop and drink equipment. This place is a mint for a man and wife, or man alone. It won't take long for you to retire owning this property. Located within 15 miles of Los Angeles, in splendid industrial and oil town, pay roll of over $5,000,000 per month. Prefer well improved ranch in the Imperial or San Joaquin Valley, or grove or vineyard in any good proven district of California. Also consider good clear property in certain other States. For $40,000 equity. Courtesy to agents.
HARRY B. GOODMAN CO.,
Exclusive Agent.
1006 Chapman Bldg. Phone 63586.

FOR EXCHANGE—
INCOME $10,000 YEAR.
You won't believe the price, but we will deliver the lot, building and furnishings for only $7500 cash and a good improved ranch worth around $35,000 clear for the equity, small mortgage, can be assumed. Will also consider some real good improved city or town property in other States in part payment. Consists of 65 room hotel and apartment building, on east side, in working man's section, close to Pico street. No better income producer in Los Angeles at the price. Courtesy to agents.

FOR EXCHANGE—
Pardon our detaining you,
BUT JUST LISTEN TO THIS.
INCOME $18,000 YEAR.
And it's for exchange. Yes, we will deliver it; lot, elegant brick apartment building and the elegant furnishings too. Large lot, nearly 80 rooms. In good rental district near Figueroa and Adams. We want a highly improved ranch, orchard or vineyard clear for the equity of $75,000 and will give an exceptional fine deal for a ranch to about $60,000 and balance cash. Also consider Chicago, Detroit, New York, St. Louis or other large cities. Submit your proposition, it's our business to try to put it over. Courtesy to agents.

Hotel building and furnishings.
Solid brick building, modern in every detail. Includes fine grade of furnishings. Very popular east side hotel, close to Arcade Depot, just off Fifth street. No cash required. Would accept a good going ranch clear in full payment of the $65,000 equity. Any well settled section of California would be considered, or would take part of price in Imperial Valley and small amount of cash. You cannot find anything better on the east side and this hotel is always filled. Courtesy to agents.

FOR EXCHANGE—
Now just listen to this.
INCOME $11,500 YEAR.
And you don't have to put up any cash, all we want is a good going ranch that is worth $40,000 for the equity, balance mortgage. Prefer alfalfa, dairy or hog ranch in Imperial or San Joaquin Valley, but would consider a good grove in proper climatic section. This property is located in one of the best pay roll towns of Southern California and you will find the price attractive. Courtesy to agents.

REAL ESTATE—
For Exchange.
Country Property.

FOR EXCHANGE—300 ACRES CLEAR.
Located in the Imperial Valley. All under cultivation, but 40 acres, which can easily be leveled. Fine alfalfa, grape or grapefruit land. 20 acres now in grapes, three or four small ranch houses. Want city income and will assume a small mortgage.

For Exchange—120 acres located about 6 miles S.W. of El Centro, in a good district. Price $150 per acre, mtg. $6000. Will consider residence, flats or store buildings of same value.

For Exchange—40 or 80 acres well located adjoining El Centro on the west, about ½ mile from high school. This is fine for subdivision and the price is right. Will consider San Fernando Valley or Los Angeles income property.

For Sale—I have some real snaps in the Imperial Valley for sale and I believe that the man who has the foresight to see the future of good farm land will agree with me. Farm land is going to move very shortly and just as soon as it starts it is going to be too late for you to trade your city property. I have owned land in Imperial Valley for 14 years and know the valley.
C. E. SPROUSE, 638 Cit. Nat. Bk. Bldg. 14559.

FOR EXCHANGE—
PRICE $72,000, CLEAR.
240 ACRES IN FAMOUS SHAFTER COLONY.
JUST NORTH OF BAKERSFIELD.
You will find that the ruling price in this locality is $500 an acre for just the land with sufficient water for irrigation, and land in alfalfa or other crops held as high as $600 to $2000 an acre. The 240 acres we are offering has more water developed than needed, about 300 inches of water, 3 electric pumping plants, only 7½, 15 and 20-horsepower, with an average lift of about 28 feet. All of the land except 40 acres is leveled, bordered and ditched and has been in crop. All is ideal for alfalfa, vineyard, garden truck, trees, etc. The price is low. Will be exchanged clear and assume on Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland or vicinities. Might consider Chicago, Detroit, New York, St. Louis and other large cities, or would take other California ranch or eastern farm property in part payment and 5 to 10-year mortgage back for difference. Courtesy to agents.

Laid out end for end the 4,000,000 maps which will be used by autoists in this part of the State would extend from San Francisco to San Diego and on into Imperial Valley. Each map is ten and one-half inches long. Ten times the number of maps will be used this year as compared with 1918. Charting, drafting, printing and touring information departments of the club have been doubled and redoubled to keep up with the insistent demand. MOTORISTS DON'T USE DISCRETION

Three Arteries of Travel to Santa Monica Bay, but They All Pile Into One

Mobs of mad motorists on the boulevards are turning Sunday holidays into throttle fests, from which survive only the fittest.

Never has Southern California seen such traffic congestion as was found on the beach roads last Sunday, and which is threatened for many Sundays to come.

Officials of the Automobile Club of Southern California in a survey of the situation declare that even the cooling influence of winter will not materially lessen what appears to be a serious situation, for the number of automobiles here is increasing at a mad pace.

Roads converging into Wilshire boulevard have borne the greatest burden of Sunday traffic. Another scene of congestion has been the entire Redondo Boulevard section, particularly where the Hermosa and Redondo Beach roads converge.

CITY ENGINEER IS HANDICAPPED

Runs Training School as Work Piles Up

Dinky Salaries Don't Tempt Experienced Men

Three Hundred New Street Jobs Are Waiting

BY MAJ. JOHN A. GRIFFIN

[Maj. Griffin, chief of the engineering department, City of Los Angeles, was the principal speaker at the last monthly meeting of the Motor Car Dealers' Association. He delivered the following address.—Ed.]

Last year a little over sixty buildings on the average were completed and opened for occupancy every working day in the week. It is hard to realize just what that means. Sixty buildings of all makes and classes were finished every day—18,364 buildings in the year. When you stop to think of that; of the wear and tear on our streets through all this traffic and the tearing up of pavements incident to the installation of gas and water and the tion of gas and water and electric connections to all these buildings, it is to be expected that with this wear and tear the streets have to go.

The City Engineer's office is now operating with exactly the same force that carried on the work in 1913, and the city is really three times bigger than it was in 1913, and the building business I don't know how many times bigger than it was then.

JUST SCHOOL KIDS

It is almost impossible to get men to fill the jobs in my office—I mean experienced men such as we should have to handle construction work running up into millions of dollars on a single job. I have had a turn-over in my office in the last two years of 168 men. The limitation of $135 a month for salaries is not sufficient to hold them and as soon as they have been trained in my office they go elsewhere to better-paying positions.

The fees paid these men do not come out of the City Council or the tax fund; they are charged right back against the assessment district of property owners who want their streets improved. The engineering costs go directly against the property.

One engineer out of two dozen, we will say, has to take these two dozen new men and teach them the business. Just about the time he gets him well trained along comes somebody and offers him a better job. Until that condition is changed I don't know what hope there is. I have 300 jobs in my office that were filed over a year ago—300 streets to be improved and no men to go at them.

WORK STANDS STILL

I went to the Finance Committee and told them with fifteen men of a higher caliber instead of thirty of the lower grade I could

AL WADDELL FIGHTS THE HEADLIGHT LAW

The case of Capt. Al G. Waddell, which has resolved itself into a test of the headlight provisions of the State Motor Vehicles Act, was set for trial for October 24, by Justice A. H. MacKinnon of El Cerrito, when Waddell and his attorney, Arthur Breed, appeared before the justice. Waddell plead not guilty.

Capt. Waddell claims that the headlight provisions of the State Motor Vehicles Act cannot be enforced, and that they are illegal and seeks to have a court ruling on this part of the act as one of the most important parts of the law.

Attorney Breed, representing the Durant Motor Company, is fighting the case for Waddell who is connected with the company. Breed presented facts and data at the hearing last week to show that the law cannot be inforced.

MAPS BY THE MILLIONS

Tremendous Demand for Touring Information Keeps Auto Club on the Hop All the Time

More than 4,000,000 road maps will be used by motorists in Southern California this year! According to figures issued yesterday by the Automobile Club of Southern California this part of the State of California is the most mapped territory in the world.

In 1918 there were only 350,903 road maps used annually by autoists hereabouts. The next year this number jumped to more than 2,000,000, at which time the eyes of the entire United States centered on Southern California as the world's greatest touring and motoring center.

SET HOT PACE

Last year local auto owners and eastern visitors secured 3,814,640 maps showing Southern California and transcontinental routes from the Auto Club touring bureau. This year the number will be increased by half a million, say club officials.

All day long, and often late into the night, the printing presses at the club headquarters on Figueroa street are grinding out maps. Often there are four charting crews out on the roads at the same time, taking notes for maps which are later turned into the "line drawings" in the club drafting department, from whence they are rushed to the printing rooms and then directly to the touring bureau for distribution to the club members and to all visiting motorists.

If all the strip maps issued by the Auto Club this year were laid end to end, they would reach from San Francisco to San Diego, and on over to the Imperial Valley. Each map is ten inches and a half long and there are at least 4,000,000 of them.

Extreme accuracy is the watchword of the preparation of these maps, and constant road changes means constant map changes.

TO THE EAST

Many motorists are not aware of the fact that they can now secure complete sets of strip (detail) maps from Los Angeles to eastern points across the continent. Maps are also available at the Auto Club now for many of the important southern routes, and others are in preparation for the Northern States.

If a motorist attempted to buy all of the maps now issued by the club, he would spend $103. This is the value of each set of maps

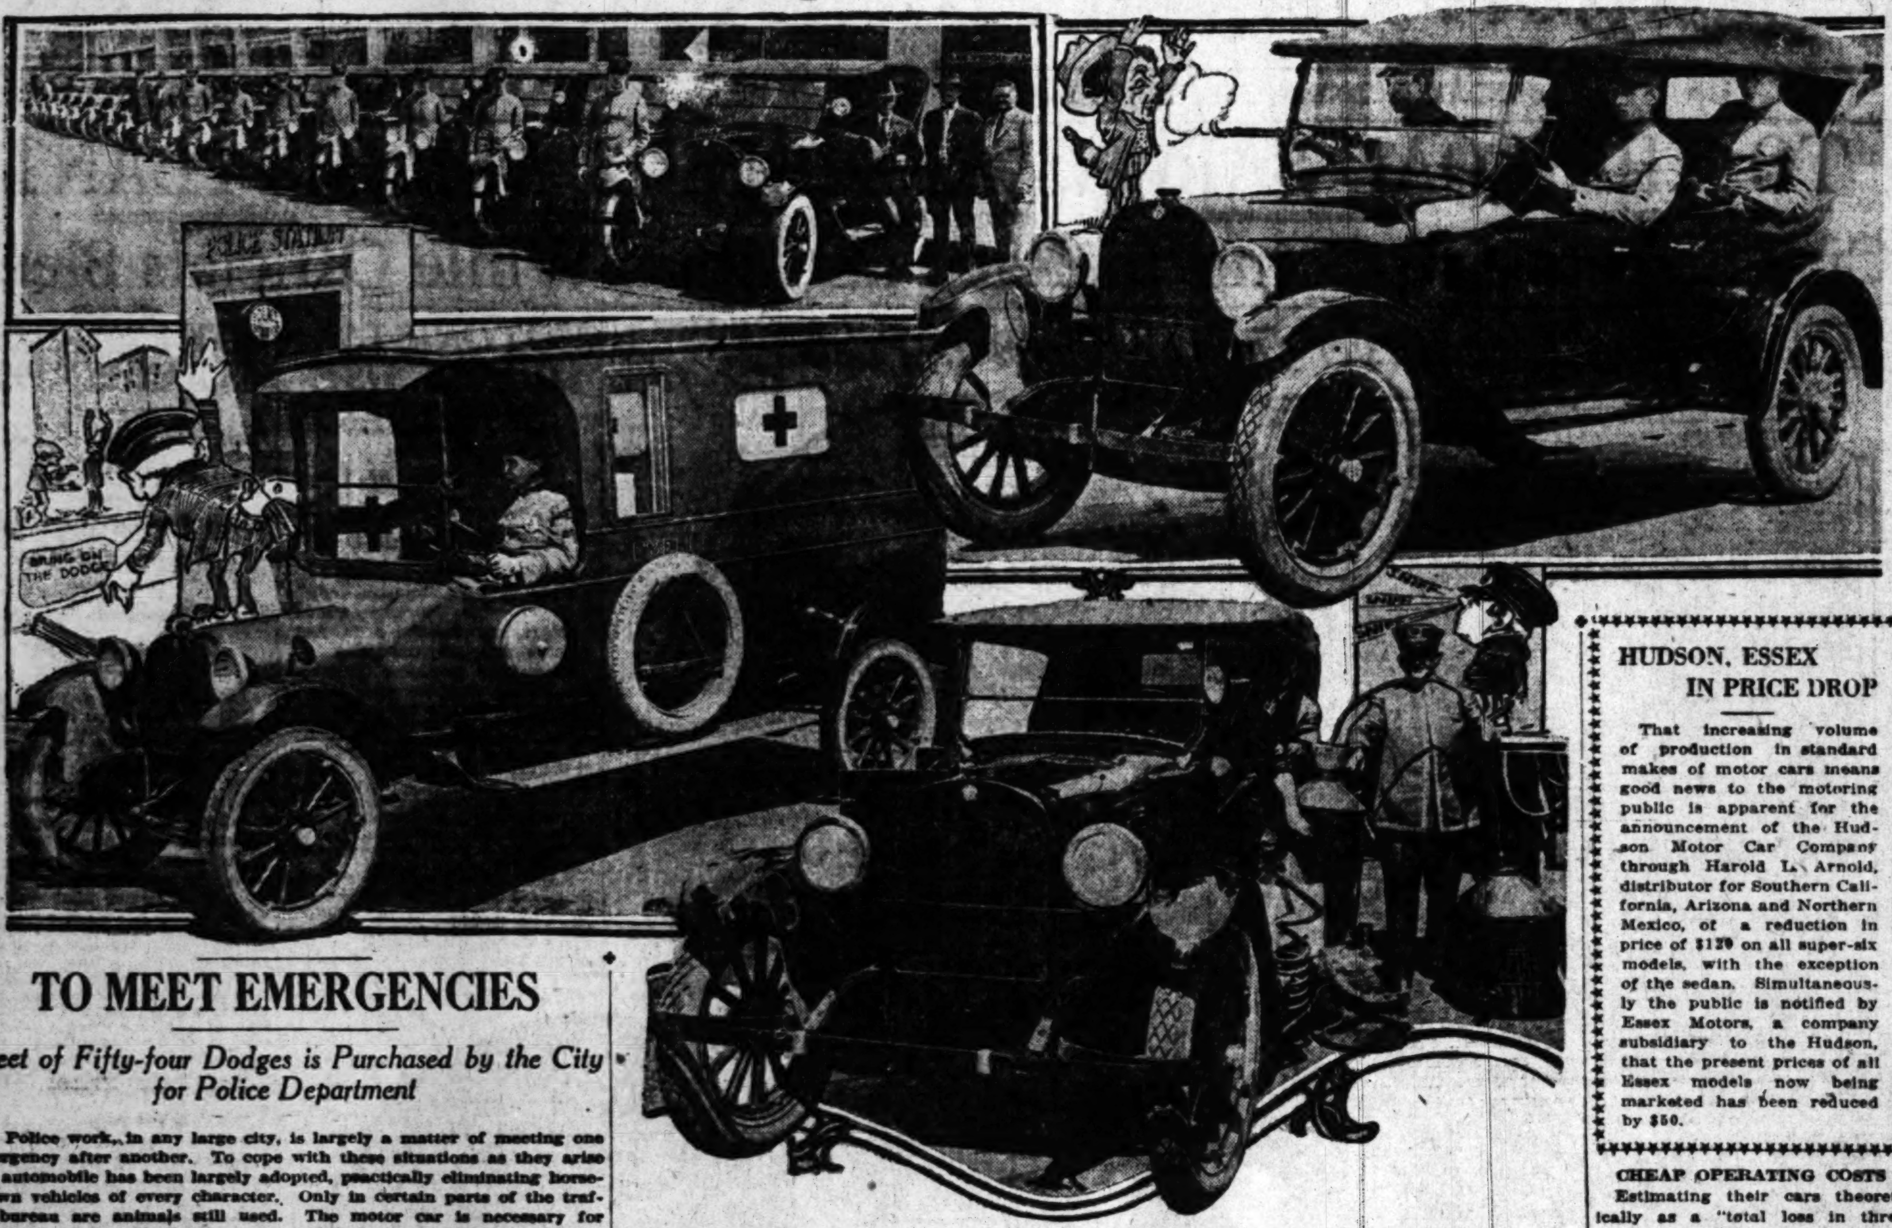
From Ambulances to "Bootleg" Cars--Dodges Show Their Versatility



Portion of a Fleet of Fifty-four Which Have Just Been Purchased by the City

A batch of the smaller cars of the police department have been cleaned out to make way for Dodges from Fred Albertson's high-powered foundry of gas vehicles. All branches of the police department will have a whirl at the new stock—the traffic cops, the shotgun squad, the emergency ambulance squad and the distillery squad. The photos show some of the uses to which the machines are put.

TO MEET EMERGENCIES

Fleet of Fifty-four Dodges is Purchased by the City for Police Department

Police work, in any large city, is largely a matter of meeting one emergency after another. To cope with these situations as they arise the automobile has been largely adopted, practically eliminating horse-drawn vehicles of every character. Only in certain parts of the traffic bureau are animals still used. The motor car is necessary for speed. Its value has been proven and it has only remained for the various city departments to determine which type and make of car is best suited to their peculiarly vital work. Realizing this, the Los Angeles Police Department has just purchased a fleet of fifty-four machines, which are now being commissioned in the various angles of the department's work.

Ambulance service, shotgun squad work, traffic investigation and policing, pawnbrokers detail, plain clothesmen's activities must all be considered in purchasing a fleet of cars for the Los Angeles police. Consequently, after much trial and investigation, the purchase of fifty-four Dodge Brothers motor cars from the Albertson Motor Company constitutes a great recommendation for the utility of this make of automobile.

REQUIRE SPEED

Time is the essence of ambulance work. Life and death frequently hang in the balance as the police ambulance hurries through the streets to render first aid to a dying person. Accompanied by a doctor, or a skilled first aid nurse, the ambulance must reach its destination in the shortest possible length of time. It must be ready for any emergency and must deliver service when that is needed.

In spite of the Federal prohibition law and of city ordinances governing the question, there are frequent infractions among the people of Los Angeles. Stills are in constant operation and the people who indulge in this class of lawlessness are known for their daring. A special end of the police department handles this work. It is known as the "bootleg" squad.

Small stills are the least of this squad's troubles for frequently a great whisky making plant must be raided, dismantled and taken to the central station at once. For this purpose Dodge Brothers cars are being used.

MANIFOLD USES

Plain-clothes men, or detectives are one of the most important ends of police work. These men require as good service as is compatible with safety. They handle cases in every part of the community and are constantly coming and going. Their uses for an automobile are manifold. They are using the product of Dodge Brothers.

One of the principal problems that confronts the city of Los Angeles is the handling of its ever increasing traffic. Any person, whether he owns a motor car or not, appreciates the study that is being put on the question by the police department in order to facilitate the movement of vehicles, people and business generally. In investigating traffic problems and, frequently, in enforcing the traffic rules and regulations Dodge Brothers cars are being used by the traffic bureau.

DRIVERS DON'T USE DISCRETION

narrows to cross Nigger Slough, and the San Pedro Boulevard where it crosses the bridges, is a swirl of autos each Sunday.

During the summer the Valley and Foothill routes have not evidenced unpleasant congestion, but their turn will come during the fall and winter, says the Auto Club.

What causes such congestion? In some instances motorists were three hours reaching Los Angeles from the beaches last Sunday, a distance of from fourteen to sixteen and eighteen miles. This is without precedent in the history of motoring, even during the days of Speedway racing.

One of the main causes, says the club touring bureau, is the selfishness of the individual motorists themselves, and also their thoughtlessness of the greatest good for the greatest number.

THREE ARTERIES

There are three main arteries of travel between Los Angeles and the beaches of Venice, Ocean Park and Santa Monica—and yet almost three-quarters of all the automobiles in that vicinity on Sunday try to squeeze themselves onto Wilshire Boulevard insteady of using Washington Boulevard and the Pico road.

Hollywood residents try to wriggle into Wilshire instead of taking the Beverly Hills-Sherman road. If motorists would only do a little planning before they leave the beach, figuring out the route which takes them nearest to their homes, traffic would logically flow into natural channels and much congestion would be avoided, say Auto Club officials.

There are countless by-path roads which can be used to avoid congestion on the main boulevards if motorists would only get out their road maps and study the situation a little, it is pointed out. These roads may be a little rougher than the greater arteries of travel, but they will save much time and trouble.

However, the greatest trouble of all is found in the heedless manner in which many autoists conduct themselves in a jam of traffic. In order that much of this trouble may be avoided today and in the future, the touring bureau of the Automobile Club has issued the following don'ts, which should be studied by every Sunday-going motorist:

SOME DON'TS

(1.) Don't fail to keep in line—the line is probably several miles long and you will increase congestion and gain no time by trying to catch the leader of the procession.

(2.) Don't fail to signal properly to the driver behind your intention to stop or turn.

(3.) Don't drive in a slow-moving line of travel in high gear—speed is impossible and for safety purposes use low or second gears.

(4.) Don't kill your motor in slow-moving traffic.

(5.) Don't fail to stay a reasonably safe distance behind the car ahead.

(6.) Don't fail to have your brakes in working order.

(7.) Don't fail to pull entirely off the road to change tires—or "fix" the carburetor.

(8.) Don't fail to park entirely off the boulevard when stopping to patronize the ranchers or roadside fruit stores.

(9.) Don't stop on the road to carry on a conversation with a friend whom you meet—invite him to your parlor and keep moving.

(10.) Don't—upon entering a conjested boulevard from a side street or a shady point along the boulevard where you have stopped to lunch or rest—push your way into the line of traffic—wait a few moments until a good and safe opening presents itself.

(11.) Don't be a car track rider—or a road hog—if you desire to travel leisurely pull over to the right as far as possible and let the traffic go by—truck drivers please heed.

(12.) Don't push yourself into every chance opening at unguarded intersections.

(13.) Don't turn around in the middle of the blocks.

(14.) Don't forget that you can save time by going one block further instead of trying to make a left turn at badly jammed intersection.

(15.) Don't discharge or take on passengers in the middle of the street or road.

(16.) Don't park in double line of triffic downtown—and go shopping—or wait for someone.

(17.) Don't follow the driver who pulls out of line starting a double line of traffic.

COVER WITH ASBESTOS

If the exhaust pipeline comes near anything inflammable it should be covered with asbestos, warns Leon T. Shettler, Rickenbacker distributor. Faulty carburetion may overheat the engine, which will raise the temperature of the exhaust pipe to such a degree that it may start a fire, unless protection is used.

HUDSON, ESSEX IN PRICE DROP

That increasing volume of production in standard makes of motor cars means good news to the motoring public is apparent for the announcement of the Hudson Motor Car Company through Harold L. Arnold, distributor for Southern California, Arizona and Northern Mexico, of a reduction in price of $120 on all super-six models, with the exception of the sedan. Simultaneously the public is notified by Essex Motors, a company subsidiary to the Hudson, that the present prices of all Essex models now being marketed has been reduced by $50.

CHEAP OPERATING COSTS

Estimating their cars theoretically as a "total loss in three years," a big public-service corporation has figured its cost of operating a fleet of Chevrolets at 4 cents per mile, according to Andrew Baldwin.

Since the day the first car left the factory the name LaFayette has advanced without falter. It has become, perhaps, the proudest name that is placed upon a motor car.

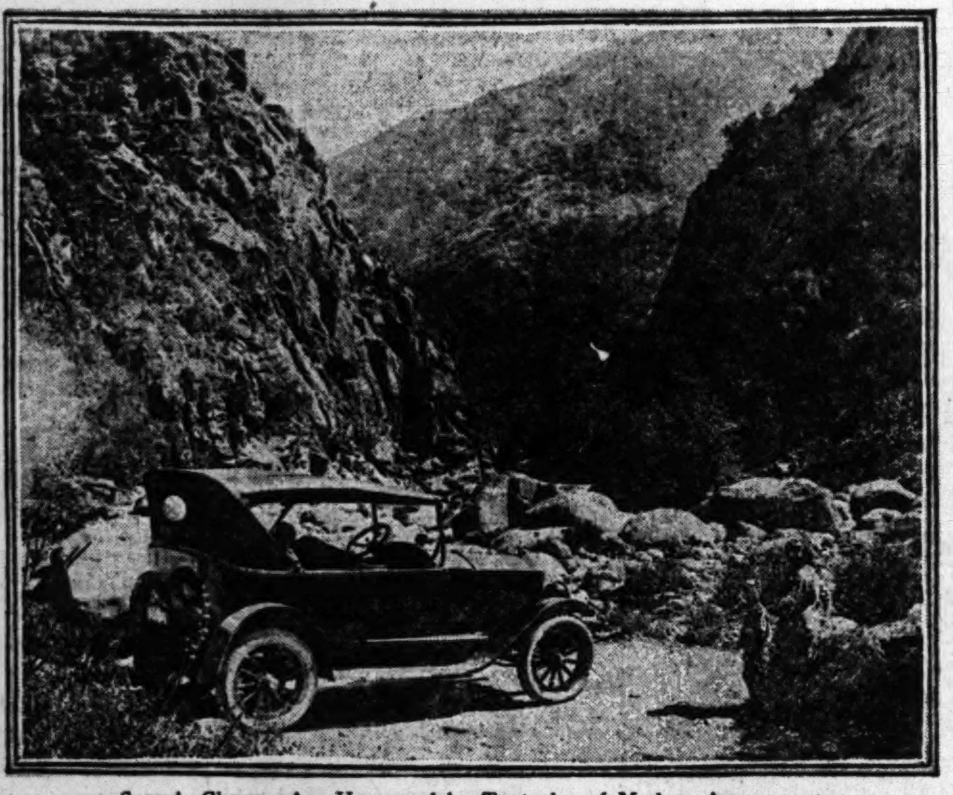
Far From the Maddening Rabble



Sespe's Charms Are Unmarred by Tentacles of Modern Amusements

Here we have the boulder-paved bed of the Sespe located in a beautiful canyon hewn out of brownstone. Formations wrought out of this rock by the instruments of nature are wonderful beyond description. The car in the foreground is a Dort.

New Crankshaft Proves a Boon to Ford Owners

"The value of the special Ford one-piece counter-balanced crankshaft as a means of eliminating vibration in the Ford car is being well demonstrated by every car in which they are installed," according to Hal Baker, sales manager of the Western Auto Supply Company.

"To quote Mr. C. F. Shield of the Shield's Kennels in Perris, 'there is no vibration at any speed.' His letter says, in part: 'This counter-balanced shaft which I have installed has been driven over 5000 miles in six weeks, and has been driven very hard, pulling a trailer most of the time. I have not yet taken up any bearings and it runs as smoothly as when it was first installed. The shaft balances the motor so well that it will pass thirty miles at low speed and make sixty without any effort. The absence of vibration, I know, is due in part to the one-piece shaft. I am a great booster for it.'

"It isn't everyone who would care to drive a Ford sixty miles per hour," concluded Baker, "but there is a great deal of satisfaction in knowing that the little boat will do it if called upon, and without vibration that is so pronounced in Fords when operated at a speed in excess of 25 miles per hour."

MANSIONS IN THE ROUGH

No Hurdy-Gurdies Sully Natural Wonders of the Sespe, Bounded by Its Brownstone Cliffs

Ever see a brownstone mansion in the rough?

There are miles of them that reach into the clouds—rough, precipitous cliffs that dip their green-fringed bottoms into a surging, rushing crystal stream. Brownstone Cliffs, that border on the Sespe, are the one remaining close-in playground of nature that stands almost in its primeval glory.

"For twenty-five years I have known the Sespe," said Chet Crank in telling F. A. Petrie, president of Mission Motor Company, about the canyon. "As a boy I climbed over the mammoth boulders that pave the creek bed and today finds it unchanged in beauty and in allurements for my boys to enjoy. Then, we had to go in on horseback or walk in over trails. Later a road was built and finally the motor car came, but with all this modern intrusion, nature still holds her own on the Sespe.

"The fisherman who never divulges his favorite rendezvous has long known this place. Its bountiful limits of speckled beauties have made it the sportsman's mecca on the opening day of the trout season. The hunter finds quail and even deer lurking within the confines of the beautiful canyon, but the picnicker, the lover of the big outdoors who counts the notches in his gun by the snapshots in his album, has yet to learn of this playground where there's elbow room enough for all.

"Last week I decided to go back to my favorite stamping ground. Four years has slipped away since my last trek and I expected to find a "hurdy-gurdy" and an incongruous dance floor imported to tempt the dimes, marring the symphony of nature, but thanks to my old friend, George Henly, who counts his wealth in 582 acres of 'rocks' instead of dollars, the beautiful canyon of the Sespe remains as nature made it.

"Henley has added to its attractiveness for the lazy city dweller. He has cut an interesting roadway a mile or so farther up into the canyon and cleared suitable spots where a motor car can be run off the road and parked amid the trees and a camp pitched. Fireplaces for the campers are all ready and their use watched with care, because a forest fire threatened his home and the canyon years ago, and fires are his only worry. But so skillfully has he arranged the camping spots that little danger of fires exists today.

"The Sespe Canyon is only five miles from Fillmore, and seventy-two miles from Los Angeles. Two and a half hours of the prettiest scenery in Southern California lines the way. All but two or three miles is on wide concrete highway and the short bit of dirt road is much better than one expects to find in such a wild canyon place.

"The route follows out through San Fernando and Saugus and then by way of Castaic into Ventura county. You pass the home of Ramona at Camulos and the source of California's only paraffine base crude oil, at Fillmore. Just beyond the latter place, and across the river, you take the road to the right and here a new stretch of concrete highway has replaced the old dirt road.

"In and out and around the rocks the road winds, and each foot adds to the beauty of the canyon. Walls of rugged brownstone, a form of sandstone, lunge way back and upwards while the sparkling white boulders in the creek bed combined with the azure blue of the heavens proclaim this as the natural home of the Red, White and Blue and George Henley swears it has spelled freedom for him through thirty years of happiness, where he and his wife have lived and reared their family.

"Several little streams add their contributions to that of the flow of the Sespe and far up the broken banks of these brooks you can climb and climb, sheltered from the sun by trees and foliage so dense that you can well imagine yourself away from the hustle of the busy world, away out in the palace of solitude where you cannot get far from yourself and it is there that you find that you have a mind and that you can use it to think with and realize that you are a living person apart from those about you.

"It's not a hard trip in any kind of a motor car. We made the seventy-two miles in two and a half hours of easy rolling and just to show you how simple a matter the travelling is, the Dort registered twenty-eight miles on a gallon of gasoline. There are no grades to climb, other than Cahuenga and Fremont passes and these you can make in high gear. Once in the Sespe, it is necesary to use gears as there are several short pitches that require it as a matter of common safety and that is all. Make the Sespe your next picnic ground. Take the family out where the youngsters can run and play at will and when you feel like camping, think of no place but the Sespe. It is the peer of them all."

FIND MOTOR TRUCK CHEAPEST METHOD

NOGALES (Ariz.) Sept. 23.—It has been found much better and far cheaper to transport laborers in Arizona by motor truck than by rail. Cotton pickers to the number of several thousand are being dispatched from Nogales to Phoenix and other Salt River Valley cities on large trucks that will hold a score or more of men and women, with a chinking of children and with room in addition for blankets and bundles of the workers' meager possessions. Food is provided en route and the laborers are delivered directly to the farm where they are to work. Delivery is at the cost of a farmers' association.

get out more work. I have not been able to get ten men. Street improvements are absolutely standing still while I am running a training school. That condition has got to be fixed up.

The sewer bonds have carried and we have a $12,000,000 job in front of us. I am ordering that cut up into fourteen sections. I am going to send a $135-a-month man out there to watch that contract go on. I put on overtime during July and August, but orders received are actually double what my overtime was.

There does not need to be any change in the charter to rectify this condition. It simply needs vision. If enough money can be loaned us to get men that are engineering men the work can be taken care of properly and more promptly and the money will come back in the way of fees from the assessment districts.

issued by the club if the maps were purchased singly across the counter of the touring bureau.

Southern California is the most completely mapped territory in America at this time. Nine expert draftsmen are occupied daily in preparing these maps for local consumption. A force of fifteen men is engaged in printing them fast enough to meet the demand of motorists who are planning tours.

Not only are the maps prepared for the club membership, but they are put out for the purpose of accurately directing visitors to the various pleasure resorts in the southern counties. Thousands of motoring visitors from the east avail themselves of the map distribution privileges of the club each year.

NEW YORK CLOSED CAR SHOW OPENS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23. — The closed-car show arranged by the automobile merchants' association of New York opened yesterday in the Grand Central Palace. Among these were two new Reo models with all steel bodies in both the coupe and sedan types.

The MASTER of the mountains

Studebaker

BIG-SIX

No matter where you drive in the High Sierras of California, even up to the 10,000-foot levels, you will hear many reports of how successfully the Big-Six Studebakers have made the trip.

When you inquire about road conditions into the mountains you will be assured that you can make the longest, steepest grades with ease—if you are driving a Big-Six.

Such a reputation as this was gained only after constant repetitions of satisfactory performance in the mountain country. The extra power of the Big-Six, its riding comfort, its meagerness of fuel consumption, and the absolute confidence it inspires in its dependability are not matched in any other make of car of like size.

Chosen by desert stage companies for strenuous transportation tasks, preferred by public utility corporations for mountain service, favored by the motoring public above all other makes of sixes in the world, the Studebaker line offers you a most attractive investment, no matter what your individual requirements.

The Big-Six instills a pride of ownership because of its beauty, its comfort, ease of handling, economy and most of all its ability to outperform your expectations.

GRAY CAR PUTS IN APPEARANCE

New Low-Price Seller on an Economy Test

Drivers Carry Message From Bay City Mayor East

Head of Company is Former Ford Executive

F. L. Klingensmith

Carrying a message from Mayor Rolph, San Francisco, to Mayor Hylan, New York, Capt. A. B. Walton, official representative of the A.A.A., and Leo De-Clark arrived in Los Angeles last week en route to New York. The trip is an official economy test testing gasoline consumption of the new Gray car.

The car is built in Detroit by the Gray Motor Corporation and is the industry's newest lightweight car, selling under $500.

F. L. Klingensmith, who was formerly vice-president, treasurer and director of the Ford Motor Company, for several years, is at the head of the new concern. Another well-known motor-car expert is F. F. Beall, who was vice-president and production manager of the Packard Motor Company, and is now vice-president of the Gray company.

The company is now building sixty cars daily and has several of the most modern buildings under way, which will result in a capacity of 800 daily in sixty to ninety days.

The Gray car is unique in many ways and has several features not in other cars. The spring suspension on the rear is double cantilever, there really being two springs secured to the axle above and below and bolted to the frame. It is claimed that the primary and secondary spring action is obtained giving the car wonderful riding qualities. A long single cantilever is used in front. The car has gasoline tank in the cowl, which eleminates the necessity of a vacuum tank. The motor in the new Gray car is built in their own factory complete, it being of the L-head type, high-speed using a Scoe carburetor and Westinghouse ignition. Timken axles front and rear and a single disc clutch operating in oil with a three-speed selective transmission constitute the car's special equipment.

The car was driven out via the Lincoln highway and will return by way of Las Vegas and through Southern Utah, where they will again pick up the Lincoln highway for New York.

Mr. Walton will check the gasoline consumption en route and reports will be made later.

NOISES SERIOUS

When unusual noises develop in a car always stop promptly, advises W. G. Fisher, sales manager of the McGill Motor Company, distributors of the Gardner light four. Serious damage may be prevented by such action, he says.

It's Worth While Driving 9000 Feet Above Sea Level

Particularly When You Can View Something Inspiring Like This

Through the slanting shadows of the pines and redwood one can view Lake Mary of the Mammoth lakes group—a gem of the high Sierras. It is easily reached from Bishop and is only 335 miles from Los Angeles via Mojave and Lone Pine. Towering in the background is part of the high Sierra range. L. G. Thompson, advertising counselor and news purveyor, found this an excellent spot in which to spend the annual vacation with his family. A Studebaker big six speedster from the Paul G. Hoffman Company furnished the transportation and Hartford shock absorbers ironed out the bumps over the desert road.

PEACE DECLARED BY WARRING FACTIONS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

HOLBROOK (Ariz.) Sept. 23.—A degree of peace has settled over the factions warring over the construction of the Holbrook-Gallup highway, one that would provide a shorter eastward route than that now generally in use, via St. Johns and Springerville. It has been agreed that the Holbrook-Lupton road shall be constructed to the New Mexican line, along the Santa Fe Railroad route, but that local interests demand also the maintenance of the Springerville highway. In a late conference the Springerville representatives placed stress on the necessity of their road as a link in the scenic route now being constructed northward from Clifton. Springerville also is the hub fom which a spoke is the most dlect oute fom Albuque the most direct route from Albuquerque to Globe and Phoenix, via Fort Apache.

THE SUPER-PLAYGROUND

Studebaker Vacation Seekers Find the High Sierras to Be Without Parallel

The High Sierras of Inyo and Mono counties have well been called the super-playground for Southern California motorists, for they are easily reached and make a strong appeal to those lovers of the big outdoors who do not require a bird's-eye maple floor and a jazz band to afford an evening entertainment.

While there are well appointed resorts in the big hills of the east side of the range it is the camper who is found in greatest profusion in the forest reserves of Inyo and Mono counties.

With the Virginia Lakes as the chief objective of the party, L. G. Thompson of the Paul G. Hoffman Company and family spent a delightful two weeks' vacation in the lake country on the east side of the backbone of the Sierras. Leaving Los Angeles at 8 o'clock one Saturday evening, the run across the Mojave Desert was made in the cool of the night and twelve hours later the Studebaker big-six in which they traveled, checked in at Bishop, 287 miles to the north.

DEVIL'S POST PILE

After a two hours' rest there the trip was continued to Mammoth, forty-eight miles further north and west. Camp was made a few miles above Mammoth on Lake Mary, which lies just below another beautiful lake called George. This locality was filled with camping parties while a few were found midway between Mammoth and Lake Mary camped on the shores of Twin Lakes which spot has greater scenic beauty than the spots above or below. Just over the divided by a good trail the Devil's Post Pile attracts a great many by reason of novel formation.

After a short stay at Mammoth Lakes, the party went north to Bridgeport, 103 miles above Bishop and twenty-eight miles above Mono Lake. From here the road was taken to Virginia Lakes, a section little known to motorists and visited by few because of five miles of rough, steep roads. It was well worth the trouble of climbing to its 9000-foot level for no one has even been disappointed in catching trout from the Virginia Lakes.

The group of six lakes are all stocked with trout. The two higher up have no fish. From the Virginia Lakes can be taken easy limits of six to eight-inch rainbows while Trumbull Lake rarely delivers a fish less than ten inches and up to fifteen.

It is quite easy to reach any of the lakes from the camp site at the end of the road without hard climbing as they are separated by hardly a quarter of a mile and the trails are good.

On the way out a scouting trip was made to South Lake on the south fork of Bishop Creek. This place is reached by driving west from Bishop at a point three or four miles north of the town. After crossing a sage brush-covered flat some five miles wide, a long, steep climb has to be made up the Bishop Creek Canyon. The grades run from 10 to 15 per cent, but as the altitude starts at 6000 and you wind up at South Lake almost 10,000 feet above the sea the grades appear to be much heavier as the air is so light that no motor can develop its full horse power. Even under such conditions as a very hot day, a continuous pull and high altitudes it was never necessary to open the throttle wide on the Studebaker big-six, although it carried a heavy load of camp outfit and passengers.

The return to Los Angeles from Bishop was made at night as was the run up the Owens Valley and including a dinner stop at Big Pine required but a half day, the Studebaker bringing the party back to Los Angeles soon after daybreak happy, tanned, delighted, but not tired with a 321-mile journey down the hill and across the Mojave Desert.

ARIZONA COMMISSION SITS ON APPLICATION

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TUCSON (Ariz.) Sept. 23.—The Arizona Corporation Commission is sitting on the application of local individuals who want to run a bus line of motor cars into the northern and eastern sections of Tucson, where there is allegation the local street car system fails to give service. The street-car company protests and claims all the traffic as necessary to its existence and operation.

HUPP IN CURIOUS ACCIDENT

Drops Seventy-five Feet, Rolls 250 Feet and Only Top is Busted

A copy of the La Crosse (Wis.) Tribune of the date of September 3, received by the Greer-Robbins company, Hupmobile distributors, recounts a strange accident that happened to a Hupmobile owned by a resident of that city. Here it is:

"This sounds queer but it's true."

"The Hupmobile roadster of Henry Haderer, Advance Bedding Company salesman, took a sheer drop of seventy-five feet at Galesville Saturday morning, rolled 250 feet after striking the bottom of the cliff and smashed sideways into a tree, sustaining damage only to the top, steering rod and right running board.

"The car had been parked on a hill above a bridge at Galesville, directly behind the car of Dr. Jedge of Galesville. The doctor in releasing his brakes, slid backward and gave the Hupp just enough of a shove to start it backward down the hill. It rolled nearly to the bottom of the incline, crashed through the wooden rail and dropped seventy-five feet to the ground.

"Witnesses stated that the car landed on all four wheels when it hit the ground, that it bounced into the air like a rubber ball and started off across the marshy ground, bouncing and gaining momentum as it went along. They said it appeared to be going forty-five miles an hour when it hit the tree.

"The top was completely demolished when hit by the low hanging branches and the steering gear and running board bent, but otherwise no damage was done. The fenders were not even dented, and the engine was in perfect running condition. The car was hoisted out of the ravine and driven back to La Crosse under its own power. There was no one in the car when it started on its wild rampage."

UNWISE TO PACK CAR TO GUNWALES

JUST AS CHEAP AND EASIER TO BUY FOOD ALONG THE ROAD, IT'S SAID

With thousands on the roads of the State and throughout the nation, most of whom are equipped with camping paraphernalia, it is no wonder that motorists seek better equipment for their automobile camps. It is no wonder, also, that so many have learned to take enough along to be comfortable without loading the car so that it is both unhandy to operate and uncomfortable for both driver and passengers.

"You still find the party that takes along enough to last several months, and finds that food can be purchased cheaply, and in some cases even cheaper than at home, along the road, and the man who insists on packing the car until the rear fenders touch the tires, however," says Frank B. Hughes, sales manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash and Lafayette distributors for Southern California and Arizona.

"There are so many things that can easily be taken in a car and that are easily loaded and that make the trips more comfortable, that it is foolish to try and be without them, but still it is foolish to take too much. The equipment that you may need can easily be packed into a small enough space, that leaves plenty of room in the car for passengers, if it is properly selected and packed.

"A luggage carrier on the side of the car with a canvas cover that can easily be made or obtained will prove handy and valuable for the long trips. A quantity of food and equipment can be carried in this way, and it leaves room in the tonneau of the car for things that you may need in a hurry."

BETTER SPEED WITHOUT STRAIN

Made
Since
1904

One of our customers made a trip across the Mojave Desert and up through Owens River Valley into the High Sierras and told us when he returned that it was the first time that they were able to make such a trip without keeping their muscles under tension to resist the jolts of the chuck holes.

He made better time than other cars not Hartford equipped, as it was unnecessary to brake down for the rough spots and then shift gears to get under way once more. This effected a saving of tires that is particularly noticeable in the slight wear shown on the new casings.

On the mountain grades he found greater security and a feeling of confidence in the car running true to the path chosen for it even when steering over rocks.

He wrote us in part as follows:

"The performance of the car with Hartford equipment gave us such a feeling of road security that my wife no longer dreads the long, steep grades of the High Sierras. It is needless to remark that we would not dispense with them, for they gave us the maximum comfort of the car, made it easier to handle by holding the wheels to the contour of the road and we felt safe at all times."

SECOND CARLOT OF CLEVELANDS

Herbert Company Finds It Easy to Sell 'Em

All Models Included in the Latest Shipment

Chesterfield, However, is Predominant One

When automobiles are received by the trainload in any distributor's territory it is certain that the particular make must be one of the largest sellers on the motor-car market. Yet not once, but twice, has this happened in the Los Angeles field within the past thirty days.

Yesterday the W. P. Herbert Company, distributor of the Chandler and Cleveland line, received a solid trainload of all models of the Cleveland car. It was the second solid trainload of machines received by this distributor within thirty days.

Seeing the tremendous increase in sales for the Cleveland car during the first part of the summer the company decided that it must accelerate shipments of machines, according to Don P. Smith, the general manager of the concern.

ORDER A TRAINLOAD

"Accordingly, we ordered a solid trainload of Chandler and Cleveland automobiles. There were 100 Clevelands in the shipment, and of this number approximately forty were of the Chesterfield sport model," declared Mr. Smith. "While the shipment relieved the immediate wants of our organization and contributed in great measure to the success of our August business, we were soon behind in our orders.

"It was again necessary to take the bull by the horns and get cars. This time we ordered a solid trainload of Clevelands. They arrived yesterday. In this shipment there is every model.

"The Chesterfield model of sport car, which has attracted such favorable attention in the city and surrounding country, will be on our salesroom floor in ample numbers to afford immediate delivery to anyone who is interested. This car presents one of the most alluring and attractive car buys on the entire automobile market.

VERY LUXURIOUS

"It is finished in a rich beige brown with a graceful khaki top. The fenders are individual and of the best material and have leather splashers. The running steps are of aluminum and the trunk guard and trunk carrier are both constructed of the same metal. In addition the wheel carrier finishes the rakish appearance of the entire job.

"This model is motored by the popular and efficient Cleveland six engine. This power plant has received so much favorable attention from the motoring public that it appears to be superfluous to mention its fine points. Those who have used it and tried it out are its best friends.

"Cleveland cars will no longer be on the 'back order' list. Immediate delivery is possible. The W. P. Herbert Company's organization is making every effort to so distribute the trainload received yesterday in a manner that will satisfy the people, many of whom have waited many days for their cars.

Her Dreams Come True

Becomes Unexpected Owner of Auburn Beauty Six

Mrs. Mattie Johnson, 1121 Santee street, had always dreamed of owning an Auburn Beauty Six, and when she won one in The Times contest she was more than happy. She is seen at the wheel of the prize car. W. J. Burt of the W. J. Burt Motor Car Company, distributors of the Auburns, is standing beside the car.

PRIZE WINNER'S HAPPY

Mrs. Mattie Johnson of 1121 Santee street, this city, is now the proud possessor of an Auburn Beauty-Six, one of the most desirable of the many valuable prizes offered by the Times in its recent contest. Mrs. Johnson was presented with the car by a representative of the Times last week and drove away with it from the salesrooms of the distributors—the W. J. Burt Motor Car Company, Pico and Hope streets—where it had been on display for several weeks.

Mrs. Johnson was able to take possession of the prize car at once, having familiarized herself with the driving of the Auburn Beauty-Six while living at Phoenix, Ariz., which she left only a short time ago to take up her residence in Los Angeles.

The lucky prize winner was quite enthusiastic over her Auburn car. To W. J. Burt Mrs. Johnson said: "Several friends of mine in Phoenix are owners of Auburn Beauty-Sixes and they get more unalloyed joy out of them than almost anything else. I have had the pleasure of riding with them frequently and the comfort of such riding is beyond words. I had hoped many times that the day would come when I could call an Auburn Beauty-Six my own, never realizing that the time was not so very far away when that desire would be fulfilled. To say that I am delighted firstly, in being one of the prize winners of the Times' contest, and secondly, in securing such a handsome, serviceable prize as the Auburn Beauty-Six, is expressing it but feebly. I know that this fine car will add to my happiness and that of many of my friends, who lack the possession of an automobile, and who I intend shall enjoy the pleasure of riding in my new Auburn."

A Motor Clock That Operates From Battery

The average man finds it practically impossible to wind his automobile clock regularly. An automobile clock that needs to be wound is all too often run down at the wrong time. Irregular winding makes for inaccuracy in any clock. The jars and jolts of the auto soon crystallize and break the most highly tempered main springs. All of these troubles have long ago made the best of motor clocks unreliable time pieces.

All this has now been overcome by a new invention recently placed on the market by the Keith-Landis Pacific Company, a corporation now being organized, with offices at 405 Walter P. Story Building, Sixth and Broadway.

This company is handling a motor clock that operates from the storage battery of the car. This clock needs no winding as long as there is any charge at all in the battery, it has no main spring to crystallize and break and the tension on the watch works is always the same, which makes for even running and accurate time always.

The inventor of this clock, A. E. Keith, the inventor of the automatic telephone, left nothing to chance in this auto clock as he has tried it on autos for over five years under the most severe service before he allowed it to be placed on the market at all. The results of these tests have not only proved to Keith that he has a reliable electric clock for autos, homes and offices, but has also proven this to the satisfaction of the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York, who give a bond with every clock guaranteeing it to keep satisfactory time or it will be replaced free.

Students Spend Time Inspecting East Bay Work

As an evidence of the interest displayed in manufacturing processes, by various schools and universities, the classes in the various grades are making it a practice to devote a certain amount of time to the inspection of the larger manufacturing plants in the East Bay district.

The plant of the Coast Tire and Rubber Company at Oakland is continually showing through the factory various groups of students and instructors and the evidence of interest displayed by these young people and their ability to understand the various processes of tire manufacture is amazing.

Last Wednesday, the students in general science at Fremont High School, in charge of Mrs. C. P. Finger, spent the entire morning in visiting the Coast Tire and Rubber Company factory, and observed every process in the making of Coast cord tires.

About forty-five students comprised the group and every process of tire manufacture from the arrival of the crude rubber to the final inspection of the finished product was studied by these students.

The Coast Tire and Rubber Company is continually showing groups of visitors through the factory, including those from schools and colleges, various organizations and foreign trade inspectors.

BEN FAHY OPENS USED-CAR DEPOT

J. Benjamin Fahy, authorized Ford dealer in Los Angeles, has found it necessary, on account of the general increase in business, to open a used-car department. The location of the department is at 1035 South Olive street.

That business will be even better in the city during the next few years than it has been in the past is the opinion of Mr. Fahy. He is backing his opinion by a considerable investment in a new angle of his already extensive business.

"I have confidence in Los Angeles," declared Mr. Fahy. "And having confidence I am not afraid to branch out. Ford and Lincoln automotive products have just begun to grow. That is why it was so necessary for us to open the used-car department. It is now in full swing and aiding the organization in every manner."

Auto Nomad is Now Trekking to the South

Automobile nomads, people who live in a car practically from one year's end to the other and travel the length and breadth of the country, are not irresponsible wanderers nor are they excessively poor. They wander, it is conceded, but who can say that theirs is not a life of pleasure and joy?

In a great majority of cases the automobile tramp is a man with a trade. He flits from community to community, from State to State, plying his trade while he goes; sometimes stopping for a day and again for a month. He is largely a creature of the weather, as the season usually directs his course.

"Geography means little to the automobile nomad," in the opinion of E. E. Caister, salesmanager of the Stephens Department of the White Auto Company. With many years' experience behind him, Mr. Caister has observed thousands of these automobile tourists over a period of years.

"When the weather gets chilly, the nomad comes south. When the sun begins its long journey in the spring, the wanderlust strikes him in a vital spot and he moves north. He usually parks his car in a town and sets up his trade for a whole. He may sell automobile accessories, or mince-meat. He may be a plumber or a painter. He works and rides and works. Sometimes he travels with his wife and frequently with a family. Slight inconvenience are so frequently in his life that he pays no attention to them. He is sometimes graced with considerable of this world's goods. He always tries to keep something for a rainy day; to replace broken parts of his automobile; to buy a new set of tires. He knows that he is entitled to no credit and asks none. He is a character in the country and one of the most interesting outgrowths of the automobile."

DRIVEAWAY STUNTS BY THE FRANKLINS

SEVERAL CARS SECURE GAS MILEAGES THAT ARE PHENOMENAD

Echoes of the record breaking driveaway staged by the Franklin Automobile Company at Syracuse on September 1, at which time 253 cars valued at nearly 700,000 were driven to all parts of the country, have been reaching Ralph Hamlin, local distributors.

As the cars went in all directions, all sorts of roads were encountered, and it seems that every sort of a record was established.

While expressions received from dealers unanimously enthusiastic in their praise of the performance of the new car, some of the records which were established offer a most concrete evidence of its ability.

S. B. Dodge of Atlanta, Ga., made a nonstop run of 1291 miles in forty-one hours and twenty-six minutes elapsed time, back to his place of business, an average of better than thirty-one miles per hour.

A. R. Gribben of Pittsburg drove 558 miles on his second day out, reaching Pittsburg via the Pocono and Allegheny Mountains.

Joe Clark of Rushville, Ind., did 563 miles in fifteen hours flat, averaging twenty-one and a fraction miles to the gallon of gas.

The distinction of having secured the highest gasoline mileage goes to W. W. Phillips of Winchester, Ky., who, during the last 100 miles of his trip, obtained a certified gasoline mileage of 30.1 miles to the gallon.

WILLYS-KNIGHT ENDS NEW HAMPSHIRE RUN

Completing within ten days' time what is generally a season's run for the average motorist, a Willys-Knight touring car has just concluded a 5200-mile, nonstop, endurance-economy run of that distance without a repair of any character and without even a puncture.

This test made in the rugged mountainous country of northern New Hampshire by the Boston branch of the Willys-Overland Company as a demonstration of the car's wonderful endurance and economy is attested to by representatives of the vagoius Boston newspapers and other persons who were passengers at various stages during the trip.

Have You Ever Driven One Car 100,000 Miles?

Four Times Earth's Circle

~Many Chandler Owners Have

ONE hundred thousand miles—four times around the world—is more than the average owner drives in ten years.

Yet many members of the Chandler 100,000 Mile Club have driven one Chandler Six over 100,000 miles, and some even 200,000 miles.

These are records of former Chandlers—and the NEW Chandler Six is even a better car, more advanced in design, more rugged, and with increased margins of safety, strength and durability.

Superb beauty and new low cost also appeal.

You may not want to run one car 100,000 miles, but a car with that capacity is the right kind to own.

What "Nash-Built" Means to the Nash Owner

Among all motor car manufacturers, Nash alone builds all the roller bearings used in the car. These bearings have been subjected to the most severe breakdown tests that engineering can devise to prove that they are of unequaled quality and workmanship.

Every foot of lumber used in the Nash factories comes to Nash direct from the mills, to be worked through Nash lumber kilns and the metal stampings are turned out in Nash's own presses.

Old methods of crankshaft balancing that prevail throughout the industry have been supplanted at Nash by recently invented machines that give an absolutely perfect balance. This ends the vibration so ruinous to a motor, gives the engine longer life, makes for better performance, and overcomes any sensation of laboring.

These are small items but in just such quality details lies the measure of Nash popularity among tens of thousands of owners.

SPEED TRAPS ARE SWATTED

A.A.A. Claims They Are the Well-Known Bunk

Prey on Careful-Driving Motorists on Road

Officials Make Living from the Fines Collected

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—"One of the most aggravating nuisances faced by the automobile tourist today is the so-called 'speed trap,' which is found in so many rural communities and small cities," declares Dai H. Lewis, Acting Executive Chairman of the American Automobile Association. "If there is one question of interest to motorists that deserves the immediate attention of State Legislatures throughout the country, it is that of the "speed trap," operated for most part by officials who depend on the "costs in the case" for their living, and who figure that every motorist brought before them is guilty.

"If these speed traps really accomplished what they are intended to accomplish, the breaking up of dangerous speeding, they would be all right," Mr. Lewis continued, "but the principal victims of this iniquitous system are the law-abiding, careful-driving motorists, who may exceed the limit unconsciously by a mile or two per hour, or who are simply held up, regardless, and charged with speeding, whether they are in excess of the speed limit or not.

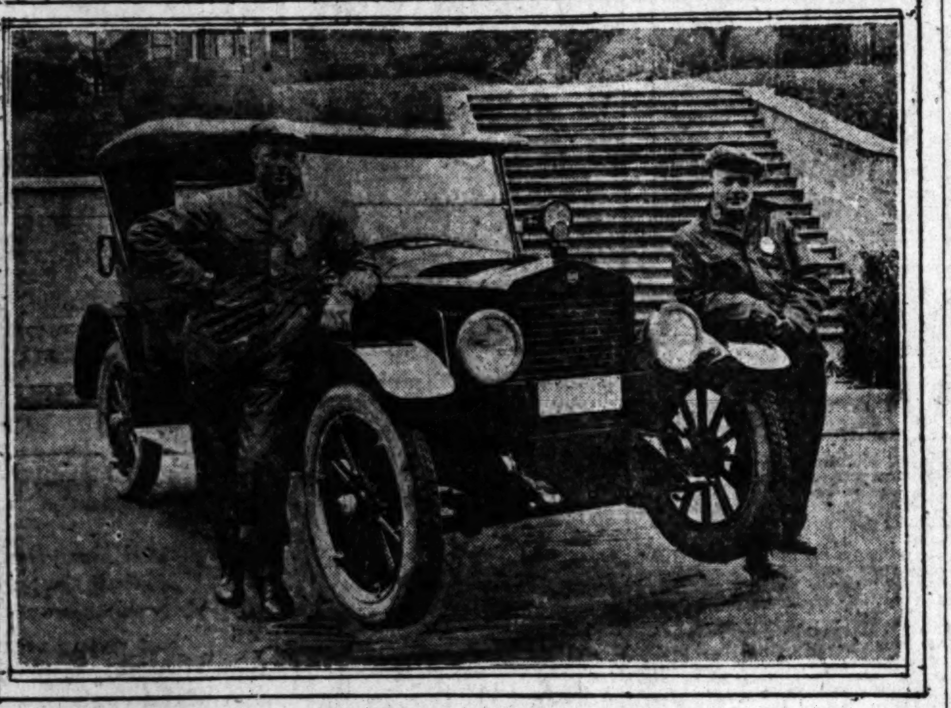
HURTS THE TOWNS

"Automobile clubs affiliated with the A.A.A. keep careful watch on such traps in their own communities and warn their members to look out for them, with the result that tourists deliberately drive miles out of their way to avoid these towns. This hurts the communities harboring the speed trap artists more than is gained by the small amount of fines collected by the justice of the peace or other official in charge of these hearings.

"In many instances, which are on files at A.A.A. headquarters, motorists have been held up by these officers and after being told that they would have to stay over several days for trial, have been given an opportunity to 'settle.' The motorist, naturally, rather than lose several days of his journey, pays the 'fine' of $10 or more and drives on, passing the word, however, to his home club, in order that other members may be warned against visiting that section.

"The remedy, as I see it," said Mr. Lewis in conclusion, "is for the State legislatures to pass laws abolishing the collection of the 'costs' in such cases by the examining magistrate and his able henchmen, the constable or other arresting officer, and to make all motorists' fines payable directly to the municipal, county or State funds, such fine to include all costs. Take the incentive of making money away from these officials and they will devote themselves to handling cases of real law-breaking and crime in order to hold their jobs. Certainly the motorists of the country are not going to submit much longer to speed trap methods such as prevail in certain parts of the country. The automobile club affiliated with the A.A.A. are making a fight for their members in every instance brought to their attention, but the remedy, to be effective, must come from the State legislatures, and all motorists of the country should combine to fight for such remedy in every State."

A Warning for Speed Burners



Look Out for These Birds When You're Going Fast

Here is one of the county's Essex cars used in rounding up violators of the traffic laws and the handsome and distinguished gentlemen who drive it. The taller gentleman is Motor Policeman W. D. Bennett, and his fellow-speed Nemesis is A. G. Boycott. They say a chase by them always means a fine or jail.

TIME TO CONSIDER AUTOMOBILE TOPS

RETURN FROM VACATIONS FINDS MANY IN DEPLORABLE CONDITION

Now that the vacation period is over and thousands of motorists have returned to their homes after a spell in the mountains or along the highways and byways, one of the things usually considered is the condition of the automobile which furnished the transportation for the outing.

Tears and rips in the top, where it came into contact with overhanging shrubbery or where the old fishing rod forced its way through the fabric; dents in the body, paint in bad shape, are all results of the summer's outing, according to Robert Thompson of the Robert Thompson Company, top and body builders.

"If left to go unheeded," declares Mr. Thompson, "these breaks and minor injuries will soon become such serious blemishes that they can never be overcome. If taken in time the expert top and body builder can fix them at a minimum of expense and in a manner that will be a surprise to the car owner."

LIGHT RECIPROCATING WEIGHT IS REASON FRANKLIN TRAVELS SO EASILY, SAYS RALPH HAMLIN

BY RALPH HAMLIN

Why does the Franklin at forty miles per hour sound as smooth and sweet as at 20? A multitude of reasons are involved—but light reciprocating weight is a salient one.

Years ago, Franklin engineers recognized the importance of reducing the weight of pistons and connecting rods. Other automotive designers did too, for that matter; but they hesitated to risk their reputation against such new materials as aluminum, so Franklin engineers beat them all to it. We brought out aluminum pistons years ago. Now, again, Franklin users will get a chance to use a motor with still lighter reciprocating weight, thanks to the new connecting-rod material — duralumin.

Exactly as strong as steel, yet very light, the duralumin connecting rods make a great change in a motor. Livelier, capable of higher speed, longer bearing life, (for there is less weight on the main crankshaft and connecting-rod bearings) the new connecting rods are going to add immeasureably to the satisfaction which the Franklin gives.

Automobile users recognize that reciprocating weight is the one problem confronting the internal combustion engine.

Engineers agree that the one limitation is the weight of the pistons and connecting rods. The starting and stopping of this weight sets up destructive inertia forces and the heavier the weight the more destructive the forces. The ideal would be reached if the weight of the pistons and connecting rods could be nothing. This being impossible, the ideal is at least being approached when we get the weight down to the remarkably low point that it is in the Franklin.

One of the important features of the series ten Franklin motor is the ocation of the crankshaft. The crankshaft, aside from being shorter and thicker, is embedded in the crankcase at a point where the shaft is free from any binding or any force that would tend to get it out of alignment.

Unlike other motors, series ten is so made that the crankshaft is two and one-half inches above the dividing line of the crankcase. It is held firmly by rigid webbs, and inasmuch as the transmission and engine are made as one unit, the crankshaft is kept in perfect alignment with the close-fitting transmission parts.

ANY KIND OF ROAD

The car may be driven over very rough and rocky roads where the chassis would be subjected to severe twisting, but the three-point mounting of the unit power plant keeps the motor and transmission perfectly suspended and protected from strain. There is little likelihood of wear on the delicate and closely fitting parts. The bearings are kept tight and the original quietness of the motor continues.

The crankshaft is case hardened and has seven bearings as formerly but it has the added advantage of the higher pressure of the oil film on which it constantly floats—a result which was obtained by an extra precaution against the escape of oil at the main bearings.

The Franklin owner gets the benefit of all thi in almost negligible wear and remarkably few bearing adjustments. In fact, the seven - bearing, case - hardened Franklin crankshaft assures own-50,000 miles of ordinary service ers of the new Franklin some without taking up the bearings.

ENDURANCE AND ECONOMY AT TOP

CAR OWNERS PREFER THE TWO CHARACTERISTICS NAMED TO OTHERS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT, Sept. 23.—Sales Manager Gilcrest's weekly letter to Westcott dealers and salesmen makes a number of interesting comments on the recent investigation made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. This investigation was made to determine what are the qualities in a motor car which the average buyer considers of greatest importance.

Twenty thousand car owners were interviewed and over 80 per cent stated they chose a car on the basis of its endurance and economy of operation. The next most important characteristic was comfort —9½ per cent placing this in first position—with other characteristics, such as price, appearance, service, hill climbing, speed, etc., attracting an even smaller percentage of buyers.

Mr. Gilcrest comments that this showing not only corroborates the policy of the motor car manufacturers, such as the Westcott Company, who have always placed durability and economy first in their factory sales and advertising plans, but is also striking evidence of the substantial basis on which the motor car industry is founded today.

"The motor car today," says Mr. Gilcrest, "has taken a place right alongside the home as a part of the permanent equipment of nearly every family. It is bought today on the same basis as a house—selected first because of its durability, dependability and capacity for giving long service at a minimum cost. This change in the basis of buying motor cars has brought about a very desirable change in the attitude of business men and bankers toward the motor car industry."

COPS LIKE SPEED OF THE ESSEX

Motor Police Use Them in Catching Violators of the Speed Laws

"Watch the Essex!" has been the slogan of the manufacturers and distributors ever since the memorable week in August, 1920, when the world-famous light car captured the American transcontinental record by carrying the United States mails from San Francisco to New York in four days, fourteen hours and forty-three minutes.

In Los Angeles, especially, but in general throughout the length and breadth of California, the phrase has now assumed a double significance—"Watch the Essex" mighty closely because the driver may be a speed cop. To this injunction the attention of speed burners and other violators of the traffic laws, particularly, is directed.

Many months ago, after exhaustive tests of various makes of motor cars as to speed, power, dependability and ecnomy of operation, the State Motor Vehicle Department purchased three Essex, for use in patrolling the highways. This number has been increased to seven, and it is asserted that in not one instance has a speed demon succeeded in evading the consequences of breaking the law when pursued by a State Motor Vehicle Department, cars.

Owing largely to the high recommendation of members of the State Motor Vehicle Department, the Los Angeles county government subjected an Essex stock car to a grilling test on the speedway at Beverly Hills under the supervision of Capt. Fred Cannon of the county motor police a little more than a year ago. Eddie Hearne, the noted racing driver, shot this car around the mile and a quarter oval twenty-four times, or a distance of thirty miles, in twenty-eight minutes, twenty-eight and four-fifths seconds, averaging 63.2 miles an hour. As a result the county has purchased thirty Essex cars to date, two of which have been assigned to the motor police.

These Essex police cars are equipped with sirens, and on the right side, at the top of the cowl and hood have perforated signs in white, which can be illuminated at night, reading "Stop—Police." They are driven variously by Capt. Cannon, Officers W. D. Bennett, A. G. Boycott, G. H. Blalock, and others. Not only are speeders but drivers of overloaded truck rounded up by these cars. So pleased are the officers with the performance of the county cars that several have bought their own Essex.

Captain Eddie Explains Fine Points of Car

To the end that perfect balance of moving parts be had and that vibration be cut to a minimum, engineers have experimented with every known device, according to Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, vice-president of the Rickenbacker Motor Company. Capt. Rickenbacker, who was the premier American flying ace during the World War, was a visitor at the establishment of Leon T. Shettler, Rickenbacker distributor in Los Angeles last week.

"Rickenbacker engineers have searched for a vibrationless engine," declared Capt. Rickenbacker. "In our car we believe we have attained as near the desired goal as possible. We attribute three reasons for our success: first, the two flywheel feature; second, rigidity of the crankshaft and the fact that all of the reciprocating parts are built oversize; third, that the crankshaft is especially balanced and designed.

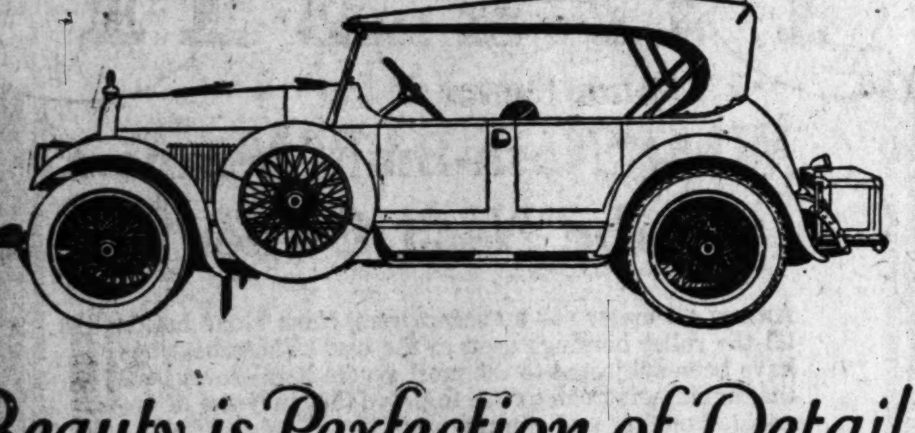
"Our flywheel feature is marvelous. In the ordinary motor, with the heavy flywheel at one end, the tendency is to throw the weight of the crankshaft against opposite sides of the bearings at the opposite ends of the motor. At the end nearest the flywheel the weight is thrown upon the under side of the shaft; and at the other end the weight is thrown upon the upper side of the shaft. This makes for wear. It enables play to develop rapidly and makes for an uneven balance and therefore develops vibration. By placing a flywheel at each end of the motor this development of play on the shaft is practically eliminated. That means vibration is eliminated. It spells economy and longer life for the motor.

Lynn Buxton Announcement is Expected

Sensational announcements of importance to automobile owners and members of the trade are believed to be under preparation in the headquarters of Lynn C. Buxton, well-known Los Angeles automobile distributor and one of the oldest dealers on the Pacific Coast, as a result of many conferences with eastern automobile factory officials throughout the past week.

Because of Buxton's long connection with the automobile trade in Southern California, he numbers among his friends thousands of automobile owners who will be vitally interested in what is expected to be a forthcoming change in activities, bringing him and his organization a position of great importance in the California automobile trade.

With Buxton is a veteran organization, thoroughly schooled in automobiles, in automotive service, that has helped him greatly in gaining a high reputation among owners and with the eastern plant executives for a high standard of service, and his activities are watched with great interest here. An air of mystery surrounding the Buxton establishment in Figueroa street during the last two weeks has been the cause of much speculation, and many believe that he will make an announcement regarding the latest moves within the next week.



Beauty is Perfection of Detail

The pride you feel in driving a beautiful motor car comes from the knowledge that it is right in every line and every detail of equipment.

Infinite attention to relatively small things is responsible for the distinctive appearance of the Custom-Built Kissel quite as much as are the main lines of body design—and only when such attention is given can an automobile fully satisfy the discriminating eye.

Kissel fenders are produced by a special process to assure the full crown and sweeping lines needed to harmonize with the rest of the car. The lamps, the spare wheel, the trunk on the rear—all look as if they really belonged where they are and all contribute to Kissel appearance.

Body hardware is specially designed for Kissel closed cars. The controls and indicators on the instrument board are symmetrically arranged and the board itself is covered with a sheet of aluminum that never loses its beauty.

Every Kissel is marked by the perfection of countless details such as these—insignificant by themselves, but combining to complete the distinguished beauty of the entire car.

(PLUS WAR TAX—F. O. B. FACTORY)

Here is a fact without parallel in the history of motor car manufacture!

Pistons of a new two-ring type show no trace of wear after thousands of miles of use. They neither slap nor pump oil!

Lubrication is the "life-blood" of any motor. It is not only imperative for efficient performance, but so that it will not "destroy itself."

The lubricating system of the Ansted Engine is the most perfect known to automotive science. Oil is forced to every friction point—every bearing surface floats in oil. Here is achievement! That is one of the sons for the extraordinary ance of the new Series 23 We claim that this car will thing a fine car should do, better and more econ that it will endure longer.

We want you to verify these that it has more power, will accelerate better, run handle easier, and ride more ably—everywhere—at all times. it today.

Ansted Engine—World's Leading "Six"

The fame of the Ansted Engine has encircled the globe. It sprang into world-wide prominence when it carried two Lexington specials to first and second place in the 1920 Pike's Peak Hill Climb. It develops fifty per cent more power than conventional motors of similar size, and is almost unbelievably quiet, and vibrationless. No motor on the market will begin smoothly as quickly as the Ansted Engine. Extra large actuated by the now famous "rocking-chair" rocker arms, are portant contributions in making this motor more flexible, economical and quiet. The Lexi-gasifier and our sive Moore Multiple Exhaust System add to its wonderful efficiency and economy.

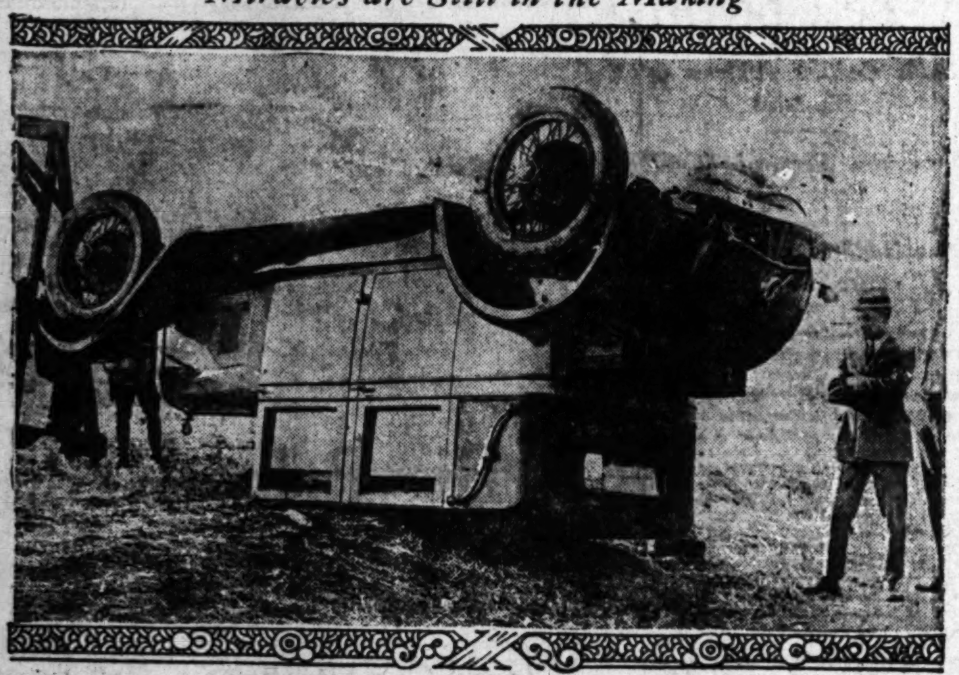
Miracles are Still in the Making



Duesenberg Turns a Few Somersaults and Comes Up Almost Without a Scratch

Nobody has whispered anything about the speed at which this car was traveling, but the fact that it jumped thirty feet from the road and lit on its back would indicate that something faster than a dogtrot was being enjoyed. The curious sight drew scores to the scene of the "wreck" on Muirfield road last week.

"DEUSIE" IN QUEER SMASH-UP

Hurtles Through the Air, Turns Completely Over and is Practically Unhurt

The remarkable strength built into automobiles has more often than not been the subject of much comment in the latter days of automotive development, and particularly is this fact noticeable on inclosed models of cars, which have been long looked upon as of frail construction.

This fact was brought sharply to mind a few days ago with the curious "wreck" of a Duesenberg "straight-eight" four-passenger coupe, in this city. The car, one of the latest models to arrive in Los Angeles, was driven over Muirfield Road, near Wilshire, and coming around a sharp bend in the road, suddenly struck a pile of gravel forming an obstruction to travel.

There was no time to bring the powerful four-wheel brakes into action, and the car, hitting the gravel, left the road, flying about six feet in the air and turning completely over. When it struck the ground, it rested squarely upon the sturdy top, balanced there, and were it not for the fact that the ground was uneven, it is believed the car would have come out of the accident undamaged. As it was, the worst it suffered was a broken windshield and a slight amount of damage to one corner of the top. Scores of people gathered to see the curious scene of an automobile on its back and were amazed at the balance of the car.

The occupants were uninjured because of the fact that the top refused to crash in, and while shaken up considerably, praised the construction of the car highly.

NINE THOUSAND POINTS WHERE LINCOLN CAR OWNERS PROFIT BY FORD SERVICE FACILITIES

"To be able to get car service on a Lincoln at nearly 9000 points throughout the country is an asset the importance of which no car owner can afford to ignore," says B. L. Graves, manager of the Ford Motor Company of Los Angeles.

"Usually the owner of a high-grade car finds himself in a strange place, if he finds that his automobile needs attention very far from any large city. But with the Lincoln owner, the question of where to gor for real and intelligent service can be quickly answered by the sign of the nearest authorized Ford dealer.

"Two things are outstanding in relation to Lincoln cars as they are now manufactured and distribuated by the Ford Motor Company. The first is this service matter, with nearly 9000 Lincoln service stations ready to do any work which is necessary and to do it thoroughly and well. It is a part of Ford policy to see that all Ford dealers are in as good a position to render service to Lincoln standards as they are to render Ford service to Ford standards and both these standards are the highest that the most rigid control can make them.

"The second is Lincoln quality. The Ford Motor Company is the largest purchaser of raw products in the automotive field by a huge percentage. Ford requirements, whether for Ford cars or for Lincoln cars, designate specifications which call for the finest quality of materials. Ford manufacturing requirements impose the hardest and most exacting standards on material suppliers, workmen, inspectors and superintendents.

"An examination of the materials going into the construction of a Ford car will disclose startling facts regarding the high standards in all material requirements. Examination along the same lines, in relation to Lincoln cars will show that only the most superior materials are employed and that these materials are converted into car parts and assembled into the car itself with watch-maker accuracy.

"If there is any question as to the ability of the Ford dealer to render satisfactory service on Lincoln cars and to maintain Lincoln standards on any work which a Lincoln owner may require, this question is answered after the owner investigates the rigid manner in which the roadmen working out of the various branches of the Ford Motor Company inspect the facilities of the dealers for taking care of Lincoln work.

"Ford dealers handling Lincoln service have, in practically all parts of the country, established themselves as the leading service stations in their communities. To render efficient, satisfactory service is as much the backbone of their business as is their sales work.

"Hundreds of Lincoln cars are passing through Los Angeles every week from distant points, some coming from points on the Atlantic coast. Owners of these cars are quick to voice their amazement at the facility with which any requirements they have made have been satisfied. On the long stretches through the desert country service has been nearly as easy to obtain as in the cities. And Lincoln owners have been pleasingly surprised by the readiness with which minor things adding to their driving satisfaction in rough country, have been attended to.

"In place of being tied up for weeks while parts were coming from remote distributing points in case of accident, the Lincoln owner is rarely ever more than a few miles from some place where he can be readily taken care of. And while accidents are not looked for and never courted, and while necessity for mechanical attention to a car of Lincoln quality is infrequent, there is a certain desirable forehandedness in knowing that should the unexpected happen, there are nearby facilities for getting things set right again."

NEW MOON CAR'S PUT ON FLOOR

Five-Passenger Sedan Being Shown at Salesrooms of the Golden State Motors

The Golden State Motor Corporation has on display at its salesroom, 1225 South Grand avenue, the new Moon six-forty five-passenger four-door sedan.

The body is built along the well-known Moon lines, and contains a wealth of detail refinements.

The body superstructure or framework is built of hardwoods throughout. The lumber is thoroughly kiln dried, and all joints are glued and screwed.

All body panels are of twenty-gauge silver-finished auto steel, especially rolled to the correct degree of softness to properly work.

For the most part the steel panels are flanged by mechanical means which insure fine workmanship and practically eliminates the use of solder. Getting away from the use of solder is a step in the right direction, for the acid used in the process is death to paint.

Especially worthy of notice is the manner in which the molding is rolled around the door and belt on this new sedan. Common practice is to apply these moldings and the inevitable result is that the paint cracks around them when they begin to work loose in service. This cannot occur in the Moon sedan, for the moldings are rolled right into the panels themselves.

A great deal of thought is given to the roof construction. It is a known fact that roofs have been responsible for most of the noise and rumble of closed cars. After a great deal experimenting, a silent roof has been developed. This is made up of light bows and slats and covered with wadding and water-proof top material. Each intersection of bow and slat is very carefully and securely fastened to prevent any movement. The quiet roof on the Moon sedan is one of its best features.

The mechanical excellence of this new sedan is guaranteed by its high grade and proved units, exemplified by Continental Red Seal motor, Delco electrical equipment, Timken axles and bearings, Stromberg carburetor, etc., each and every one the product of recognized leaders in their respective spheres.

Oakland Cars are Distinct in Many Ways

That the new 1923 Oakland series of cars is distinctly new, was the opinion of all who saw these cars at the initial showing in the Los Angeles Oakland Company display room. The distinctive Oakland stream line has been enhanced by the new sweeping full crown fenders, which are wider, heavier and extend over the wheels in a deeper arc. Lowering the running board an inch and a half, and the new full crown fenders and running board shield, is mainly responsible for the full appearance of grace and power which sets this new series apart as the most distinctive the Oakland Motor Car Company has turned out.

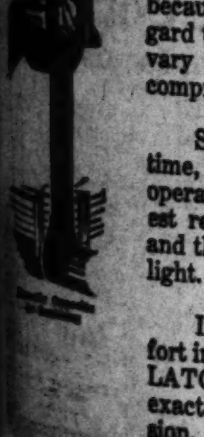
"The comfort and convenience of the owner has evidently been uppermost in the minds of the engineers, says H. C. McVey, general manager of the Los Angeles Oakland Company, judging by the mechanical changes and improvements noted. For instance, there is a lever for dimming lights, mounted on the top of the steering column. This is a distinct innovation. In fact, the Oakland is said to be the first car to have a headlight dimming apparatus mounted on the top of the steering column. This lever may be operated by the thumb and without moving the hands from the steering wheel. When the night driving now being done is taken into consideration, the value of such a device cannot be overestimated.

"Another innovation, particularly for a car in the low-priced field, is the new hand control for spark and throttle mounted on the steering wheel, a type declared to be superior to the quadrant. Gear shifting levers have been lengthened considerably to allow for shifting with minimum effort.

"To provide for quick starting, winter and summer, a new improved Marvel carburetor system has a heat control working automatically with the throttle, insuring uniform mixture the year round, under all weather conditions. A new Remy distributor, with a semi-automatic advance and retard feature, cares for all spark adjustment inside the breaker box, in place of the entire distributor head moving.

WATSON STABILATORS

Best by Results



Watson STABILATORS differ from any other spring recoil check you may have seen or tried.

The reason most devices help so little is simply because they resist or check recoil without any regard to that absolute law of physics that recoil must vary in exact proportion to the amount of spring compression.

Some devices offer the same resistance all the time, no matter what the size of the bump. Others, operating on the snubbing principle, offer their lightest resistance when the recoil is the most violent and their heaviest resistance when the recoil force is light.

If such devices help, imagine the supreme comfort in riding in a car equipped with Watson STABILATORS. They resist the recoil of your springs in exact proportion to the amount of spring compression.

Come to our salesrooms and see for yourself why Watson STABILATORS are best by results. Try a set on your car for fifteen days. If not satisfied we will take them off and gladly refund your money.

Watson STABILATORS are standard equipment on the new Frankin, Deusenberg Straight Eight and other cars.

A Perfect Companion for Work or Play

The 1923 Six Cylinder Sport Touring—$1675

Equally suited to the rigors of everyday business driving and to carefree outing tours and social motoring, the new six cylinder sport touring combines the well known Buick sturdiness and dependability with a snappiness and sparkling beauty that mark it as a distinctively smart motor car.

Rich, contrasting colors, set off with brightly polished nickel radiator and fittings heighten the sweeping lines of the long wheelbase and body. The roomy seats are upholstered in fine embossed leather, and every driving and riding comfort and facility are provided. Clock, speedometer, cigar lighter, gasoline and oil gauges, lighting and ignition switches and ammeter, long, nickeled gear shift lever, windshield wiper and rear vision mirror are among the convenient details that are standard equipment.

New rear spring suspension, and snubbers on the front springs have brought greater riding ease while the famous Buick Valve-in-Head engine has been so refined as to increase its traditional power and dependability.

RADIO CARAVAN TOURS COUNTRY

Willys-Knight and Overland Cars on Exhibition

Plan to Cover Fifty-five Towns in Two States

Tour is New Angle in Auto Salesmanship

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) Sept. 23.—The Willys-Overland radio caravan in charge of D. W. Crabbs from the local Willys-Overland branch, consisting of eight different models of Willys-Knight and Overland passenger and commercial cars, arranged in an attractive manner to interest the business man in any form of transportation that he may desire, is now entour.

Leaving St. Louis August 29, the caravan, which is equipped with a radio receiving set, will continue its tours through the months of September and October and in that period will visit fifty-five different towns in the States of Illinois and Missouri.

Demonstrations of the various models, the famous Willys-Knight talking motor, the "motor that speaks for itself," will precede the daily radio concerts which will consist of music, baseball scores, market reports, late national news, etc., furnished by the KSD broadcasting station of the Post-Dispatch of this city.

Crowds of from 1500 to 2000 persons have witnessed the demonstrations, listened with attention to the lectures on the various models and cheered the program as arranged by the Overland radio caravan.

The tour is a new angle in salesmanship and many live prospects have been developed for the local Willys-Overland representative under whose auspices the concerts and demonstrations are held and they have reported back to the branch several attendant sales since the caravan passed on elsewhere.

Not for those who are "old" at thirty—but for those who stay "young" at fifty does the Stutz make its chief appeal.

In Europe it is regarded as the most typical American car—rugged, capable, yet reflecting the finest breeding and traditions.

It inspires admiration and a desire for ownership among real, red-blooded men and women—the sort who thrill with the excitement of a close finish and will stand on their seats and shout when the ball goes over for a touchdown.

At its present price the Stutz is incomparable among fine car values—an automobile without counterpart in the field of refined equipages.

Utility Even in the Field of War Deeds

Not the least of the uses to which the automobile has been put is that of providing rapid movement for military equipment. The great war proved that a mobile force in the field largely depended upon the motorized end of the Army. Consequently, the truck and the passenger car were pressed into service wherever possible.

As gun carriages, the motor truck rapidly proved its utility. As a conveyor of supplies, civilian experience had already convinced the Army. In one department, howver, it was only after much experiment that the truck was employed—that related to the mounts for antiaircraft artillery.

Antiaircraft guns were forced to move fast. There was every opportunity for a raid before a piece of this class of artillery could be sent into action. The motor truck, however, largely solved the question of mobility.

"It takes a particularly dependable motor truck to handle an antiaircraft weapon," declared O. R. Fuller, president of the White Auto Company, distributor of the White truck. "White trucks were and still are largely employed by the United States government in this division.

"The gun must be mobile while on the truck, and the vehicle itself must be susceptible of going any place and every place at a moment's notice. The Army found the White to be especially adapted for its uses. Hundreds were so utilized and successfully negotiated the most severe tests, both during the actual conditions of the war and since. The utility of White trucks has been so frequently proved that it is hardly surprising when new uses for it develop."

Drivers Place Trust in Cars That Are Weak

Trusting that weakened parts of a motor car will somehow miraculously warn the driver before they break, is the unfortunate fallacy of judgment that in the end always takes the joy out of motoring.

At least such is the belief of D. R. McBryde, proprietor of the McBryde Lubricating Service, who says:

"'Lettin gwell enough alone,' doesn't apply to the vital working parts of an automobile. The principal reason is that it is extremely difficult to be sure when these parts are well enough and when they are not. A slip-up in judgment is apt to prove costly.

"Daily we read of some unfortunate and generally unnecessary accident. 'Car suddenly swerved off the road and overturned in ditch.' Or—'front wheel came off; latest reports from the hospital, etc.' Not uncommon occurrences and usually traceable to that false security of mind that the average motorist labors under when he believes that everything is well enough and therefore leaves it alone.

"At least 85 per cent of these evils can be counteracted, first, by a complete job of expert lubrication and thorough tightening, and second, by a weekly inspection that will detect any bad flaws before they can reach a point where they will seriously jeopardize the lives of the passengers. Enough stress cannot be layed upon the vital importance of maintaining an efficient lookout so as to be able to check some potential disaster before it can gain headway. Aside from the question of personal safety is the substantial saving this course affords the car owner."

Maryland Auto Club to Sever A. A. A. Bonds

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The Automobile Club of Maryland has voted formally to affiliate with the National Motorists' Association.

This action means that the Maryland organization will sever its relations with the American Automobile Association, and that another important city will be added to the chain on the Eastern Seaboard, in which section the new National Association of Motorists is increasing its representation.

The action of the Automobile Club of Maryland, one of the largest progressive organizations of the East, was taken only after mature deliberation, and after every possible opportunity had been afforded the officers, the board of directors and the individual members of the club to investigate the proposed new affiliation, and to express themselves.

This vote resulted as follows: In favor of affiliation with the N.M.A., 881; opposed 78. This is a victory of over 11 to 1.

PRATHER COPS GOLF TROPHY

Leads Cadillac Athletes in Big Meet

Festivities Part of "Cad" Convention

One Hundred Dealers Trek to Detroit

The most enthusiastic meeting of Cadillac dealers for many years was held at the Detroit factory last week. Distributors from all parts of the country gathered to discuss sales problems and hear a report from President H. H. Rice regarding the tremendous business that has been done by the Cadillac during the past year. This meeting marked the end of the first twelve months of the model 61, which has been by far the most popular of all Cadillac models. The factory production is now at its height, and will be maintained at top figure as long as manufacturing conditions will permit.

P. T. Prather, San Francisco manager, represented Don Lee at the conference, and was one of the principal speakers. Prather was asked to talk on sales methods employed in California and to tell of the different things that have been done to keep the Cadillac in its position of leadership. The Californian was enthusiastically received and acquitted bimself with flying colors.

After the conference a day of play was arranged by the factory, and the Old Guard, a golf tournament for the Cadillac championship, being staged on one of the local courses. Prather with a score of eighty-three, carried off all the honors and brought home to California the Old Guard's cup and the president's trophy.

Cadillac plans of production include the running of the factories full force during the winter, with a production even greater than that of the past twelve months, which has been the greatest in Cadillac's history.

H. H. Rice, president and general manager of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, so informed Cadillac distributors. Cadillac representatives from nearly 100 Cadillac distributor organizations attended the convention.

Mr. Rice sounded an optimistic note concerning the coal situation and business in general. "I believe that general business," he stated, "in spite of a few disturbances on the surface, is decidedly on the upgrade. I not only believe that people will be able to get coal this winter, but also manufacturing concerns will get enough coal to operate.

"Strikes in any essential line of business are bound to be settled after a short duration. These strikes are too vital to last long. The crops this year are good, and I believe the farmers will obtain good prices for them. Factories that have beeo shut down are gradually opening."

Kissel Brings Out Something New in Comfort

What promises to establish a new standard of riding comfort in motor-bus transportation, and at the same time create a new type of bus chassis and body design, construction and finish, is the new Kissel Coach Limited, just announced by the Kissel Motor Car Company of Hartford, Wis., according to D. Gerard Chessman, manager of H. J. Wurzburger Company, local distributors.

"Kissel has gotten away from the customary motor-bus design and has produced a vehicle that in body, appointments and equipment, mechanical innovations and engineering features, equals the riding ease, operating smoothness, roadability and quietness of the sedan," says Mr. Chessman, who states that he had the opportunity to personally inspect one of these new creations during his recent visit to the Kissel factory with Mr. Wurzburger.

"The easiest way to describe the 'coach limited,'" he continues, "is to imagine a sedan or limousine furnished and equipped completely along the custom-built de luxe lines to accommodate eighteen passengers instead of five or six. The car is hand-made throughout. It is specially braced with angle-irons that prevent spreading and squeaking developing, while all lumber used is northern ash covered with aluminum.

"Seats, upholstered in Spanish leather, are also specially built to give maximum riding comfort. Each seat has its own individual exit door, all doors being automatically locked when the car is in motion. A sixty-one-horsepower Kissel custom-built motor completes a job that is regarded as remarkable in the annals of bus construction."

Service Quite an Item, Says Auburn Dealer

"Our service department has done more to increase the sales of Auburn cars than any other branch of our business," said W. J. Burt of the W. J. Burt Motor Car Company, Southern California distributors of the Auburn beauty six.

"This is due to the fact that the keynote of the service department is immediate attention to the wants of the Auburn owners. The latter knows that he will be accorded service without delay and he cannot refrain from telling his friends what the department does for him.

"Boosting in this manner, in addition to the owner's recommendation of the Auburn beauty six as a desirable car, plants the right seed in the minds of the owner's friends, with the eventual result—these friends also become owners of our cars."

Mr. Burt, who is a practical machinist, was superintendent of a machine concern years ago. When not in the sales department of his company he is invariably found in the service end, giving his personal attention to the various important cases that are brought in for "shop treatment."

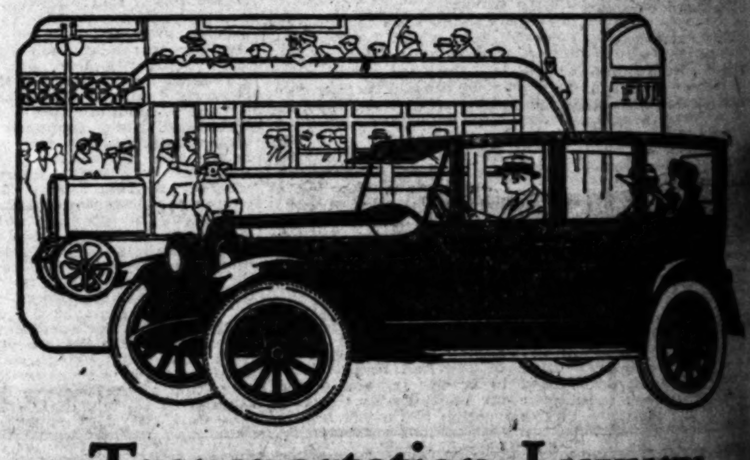
WILLYS-KNIGHT



Transportation Luxury

THE popularity of the Willys-Knight Sedan is a natural reflection of the enthusiasm which motor experts always express.

The first thing that impresses you, other than the smooth, even flow of power, is the quietness with which the car operates.

Many new motors operate quietly, it is true, but the outstanding feature of the Willys-Knight Sleeve-Valve Motor is that this quietness improves with age—and the motor gains in power! It actually makes use of the carbon that works havoc in the usual type of motor.

There is a richness and dignity to the Willys-Knight Sedan that captivates you the moment you see it.

And you will find its growing popularity confirms your good judgment when you decide to order a Willys-Knight Sedan.

ACCURACY IN AUTOMOBILES

[illegible] do not appreciate the fine accuracy that is built into a motor car. Just how much [illegible] is employed can only be [illegible] by the engineers' blueprints [illegible] by the micrometer and other delicate instruments that are used to [illegible] the metallic parts going into the vital portions of an automobile [illegible].

An example is furnished in the [illegible] factory, according to [illegible] of the Troy Motor [illegible], LaFayette and [illegible] distributors for Southern California and Arizona. The proper [illegible] of a limit of a thousandth of an inch from blueprint part of an inch [illegible] the finished automobile [illegible] to be accomplished in [illegible] manner by engineers [illegible] have now been working on [illegible] car for well over a year under the direction of Charles W. Nash, himself a master engineer and who is head of the LaFayette and Nash manufacturing organizations.

"Every motor has what is known as a 'favored tolerance,' a variation which is permitted in the dimensions of a majority of parts," says Breyer. "Although all of the fine-car manufacturers allow no more than a thousandth of an inch variation in many parts, the favored tolerance is more than likely to be twice that amount. The favored tolerance throughout the LaFayette chassis is one-thousandth, an uncommonly high standard.

"After the metal used in motor construction is treated by many processes that harden and strengthen it, it must still pass many engineers' and scientific tests before it is finally built as a complete unit of power plant.

An Ounce of "Prevention"

Fire Extinguishers Are Very Handy Some Times

The Western Auto Supply Company carries all manner of safety appliances for the automobile, one of the most important of which is a handy fire extinguisher which can be slipped in an out of the way place in the machine.

MERIT IN SAFETY DUDADS

A great many motorists have formed the opinion that the various and sundry "safety" accessories now on the market are, in a large measure, unnecessary. This is really not the case. While some of them may not be considered as absolutely essential, nevertheless, they all play their part in both the safety of the automobile and its driver. Some of them are so necessary, in fact, that they are required by law. Among these are the safety lens for the headlights and the warning signal. That safety lenses are necessary goes without saying—any motorist who has ever driven his car at night realizes the advantages of a headlight that, while thoroughly lighting the road, does not blind the drivers of approaching cars. A good warning signal, one that is reliable and can be depended upon to give a clear, unmistakable warning at all times could not, even if the law permitted, be dispensed with. The motor-driven horn or the whistle signal are the most reliable warning signals that can be secured.

With these two accessories the car can be driven in compliance with the law, but what of the other safety accessories that are so necessary as to become almost necessities? The reliable bumper that protects the front and rear of the car against collision is a safeguard so well known that the insurance companies recognize it to the extent that the cars so equipped are insured at a lower rate than others. The fire extinguisher also is recommended by the insurance people and plays its part in the insurance problems. Tire chains are a necessity when driving in wet weather as is the windshield wiper that allows clear view of the road ahead.

Conditions in East on Firm, Healthy Basis

That present business conditions throughout the East are firm and healthy, despite the railroad and other strikes, with the indications most favorable for a steady growth in volume, is in substance the report of Harold L. Arnold, Hudson and Essex distributor, whose recent eastern trip took him through various large centers of population and gave him ample opportunity to make a survey of the general situation.

"Everybody with whom I discussed economic and industrial conditions," reports Arnold, "struck an optimistic note, asserting in effect that everything indicates a steadily increasing volume of business. All the trades appear to be flourishing at present. Contrary to report I did not travel on a single train east of Detroit that was more than ten minutes behind schedule at any time.

"As a marked example showing the general trend of affairs I might draw attention to the huge increase in the business of the Hudson Motor Car Company, which is now planning for a production of 7500 cars a month, more than double the output monthly last spring.

"Present models, both of Hudson super six and Essex cars, have met with so much favor that no changes are contemplated for the near future. The energies of the factory are being concentrated largely on the coach models because of their tremendous popularity. Unquestionably these types have appealed more strongly to the motoring public than any other ever designed by the factory, as shown by the fact that more than 50 per cent of its energy is being devoted to producing them.

"The coach models have demonstrated conclusively that a majority of motorists prefer inclosed cars and will buy them if the price is reasonable. Owing to quantity production both Hudson and Essex coaches are priced so little above open models that the ideas of the public have become manifest in this regard."

Precision is Big Factor in Car Longevity

Much of the longevity of the modern automobile is due to the precision and care exercised in construction work at the big factories where the automotive transportation units are turned out. Motorists can help the lives of their cars after they have once started in service, but owe to the manufacturers chiefly the fact that their cars run over a period of years.

"The accuracy practiced by the Oldsmobile engineers is an example of this fact," says Clair R. Savage, sales manager of the local branch of J. W. Leavitt & Co., Oldsmobile and Columbia distributors for California. "The Olds factory throughout, from the scientific laboratories where first tests of metal and methods are made under accurate observation, is a model of precision and efficiency.

"Through the practice of modern engineering methods, they have advanced and developed many theories that are the result of more than a quarter of a century's experience in building cars, and that have resulted in widely increasing the popularity of Oldsmobile cars. One of the latest developments noted in the factory is the process of 'rolling' the cylinders, devised by Olds engineers after long research work. By means of this, the Olds cylinders are turned out of the factory perfectly round from end to end and possessed of great hardness."

SUPERIOR-MIAMI ROAD ACCEPTED

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

GLOBE (Ariz.) Sept. 23.—The Superior-Miami highway has had official acceptance by District Engineer E. S. Wheeler of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, though a few men still are working on the Miami terminus. An immense amount of rock work had to be done down the side of a canyon through which Miami is reached, but the road now is considered the best in the West. The workers employed now are digging on the Apache Trail, in four camps.

The county road department has opened the Hardt-Rye section of the road from Roosevelt to Payson, detour by the old and rough road thus being avoided and distance saved. South of Hardt a steam-shovel gang is widening and leveling a mile of road a day. Construction has been started on bridges across Rye Creek and across the East Verde River, the latter seven miles beyond Payson. It will be of steel, 203 feet long.

Give it a new Gizzard

Re-Life the Car!

By John Eliot

DON'T sacrifice it for the Piffling Price it could now be sold for!

Don't Trade it in on a new Car for a Fraction of its real worth.

Give it the Econo-Mist "Gland Treatment" and bring it promptly up to Par.

Many wealthy Families, who could afford new Rolls-Royces every year, resist the extravagant "New Car" obsession!

They maintain their Brewsters, Pierce-Arrows, Locomobiles, Packards, Simplexes, Cadillacs, Loziers, Stutzs, Mercers and other such Reliables, for FOUR to SEVEN Seasons.

And—these fine old Cars are as CREDITABLE to their Owners as are the fine old mensions many such Car-Owners inhabit.

Not proper Pride,—nor Common Sense,—nor good Judgment, calls for a new car every year, when the old one can so easily be made practically AS GOOD as new.

The only Vital difference between the 1919 Model and the latest 1922 Model lies in CAPACITY TO DIGEST 1922 GASOLINE.

Tires have improved vastly in Mileage and Value!

But,—Gasoline has DETERIORATED seriously in both Mileage and Value!

The Carburetors of Yesterday extract but meagre Mileage, and little Luxury-Car Performance, out of today's low-grade Fuel.

This one great disadvantage can now be immediately corrected by utilizing the 40% greater Efficiency and the larger Luxury-Performance of:

The "Econo-Mist," Self-Paying, Carburetor

PIERCE-ARROWS that delivered 7½ miles per Gallon with their own Carburetors now deliver over 12 miles with "Econo-Mist" Carburetors.

Locomobiles that delivered 8½ Miles per Gallon with their own Carburetors now deliver over 11 Miles with "Econo-Mist" Carburetors.

Packards that proved-up at 9¾ Miles per Gallon have "Econo-Misted" over 14 Miles.

The Mileage-per-Gallon of Stutz Cars has been increased by Econo-Mist Carburetors 44%,—Cadillacs 53%,—Mercers 42%,—Studebakers 43%,—Buicks 46%, and so on down the line.

We not only PRINT this statement, but we PROVE it by the Signatures of the Car-Owners themselves to Proving-Station Test Sheets, and by their Pay-out-of-Saving Contracts.

Demand that Proof. We are here to supply it!

When Wasteful Carburetors Turn Soap-Makers

WASTE Gasoline is the Arch-Enemy of Lubrication.

Because, surplus Gasoline in the Cylinders "Cuts" the film of Lubricating oil,—works down into the engine base and there makes a scouring "Soft-Soap" out of the circulating Oil Reserve—causing Friction, Heat, excessive Wear.

Two-thirds of all Gasoline Waste is due to "Rich Mixtures"—to insufficient Air combined with the current low-grade Fuel when drawn into the Cylinders.

The Carburetor that cannot combine 14 to 18 Parts of Air with EACH Part of today's Gasoline MUST draw into the Cylinders a ruinous surplus of Undigested Fuel.

And, the Car equipped with an old-style Carburetor is generally a Chronic User of Rich Mixture, in order to develop Power enough for satisfactory Miles-per-Hour.

That "Rich Mixture" soon converts into injurious Carbon deposits, Soot, Pre-Ignition and Soapy Lubrication with its train of Motor Ills.

Then on to the Repair Shop and the Motor Morgue!

TO Save Gasoline is therefore to Save Repairs and lengthen Car-Life.

About Eighty Per Cent of all Cars tested at the Proving Ground show that they have been regularly running on very Rich Mixture,—8 to 12 parts of Air combined with each part of Gasoline,—instead of 14 to 18 parts Air.

But,—the Owners of such Cars were blissfully unconscious of this.

How COULD they KNOW what Mixture they were using?

The "Econo-Mist" is the ONLY Carburetor in existence which has a DIAL at Steering Wheel, telling plainly to all who can read figures the precise ratio of Air to Gasoline the Carburetor is using.

That visualized "Rich Mixture" can then be instantly corrected at the wheel, without lifting the hood or leaving the seat.

The Econo-Mist Carburetor has no Springs to weaken,—no Set-Screws to vibrate out of Adjustment,—no multitude of Moving Parts to Wear and cause Leakage or Friction.

The only Carburetor that Must Pay for Itself

THE Econo-Mist is the only Carburetor sold on an absolute Show-Down Test, its price being made PAYABLE OUT OF ITS OWN PROVEN GASOLINE SAVING.

Other Carburetors have admirable Talking Points, but no other puts its Theories to the Test with EACH CAR-OWNER'S CAR, as does the Econo-Mist.

No other PROVES its good faith by making the Carburetor PAY FOR ITSELF out of its own Gasoline Savings, under binding Contract.

Remember THAT!

More than 14,850 Cars in Los Angeles alone are today equipped with this Maximum-Efficiency Carburetor.

There is an Econo-Mist Carburetor here waiting for YOU—practically without Cost.

BRING your Car around to the Proving Station of the Motor Economists, at 3000 S. Main St., and declare yourself as "from Missouri."

Ask for the Signed and Certified Records on same make Cars as your own.

Then Test out the Mileage-per-Gallon of YOUR Car on the Proving Ground,—with its OWN Carburetor.

Contrast results with those delivered over same Proving Ground, under same identical conditions, with an "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetor.

Then act upon the EVIDENCE.

You be the Judge, Jury and Umpire.

Knowing what you are daily losing, not only in Wasted Gasoline, but in Luxury-of-Motion, in Minimized Repairs, and in Car Longevity.

Bring around that good old Wagon today and "Give it the Gland Treatment," y' know!

REDUCTIONS IN WILLYS-KNIGHT

And New Price Level is Set for Overlands

Drop Unexpected in View of Demand

August Greatest Month of Production

Further reductions in prices that bring the Willys-Knight cars down to a lower price than a Knight-motored car has ever been offered, and establishing a new low level for Overland models, have created a rush of business into the Willys-Overland Pacific Company, Pacific Coast factory branch distributors for the two cars, according to an announcement made yesterday by R. J. Flynn, sales manager of the local organization, following the cut announced Thursday.

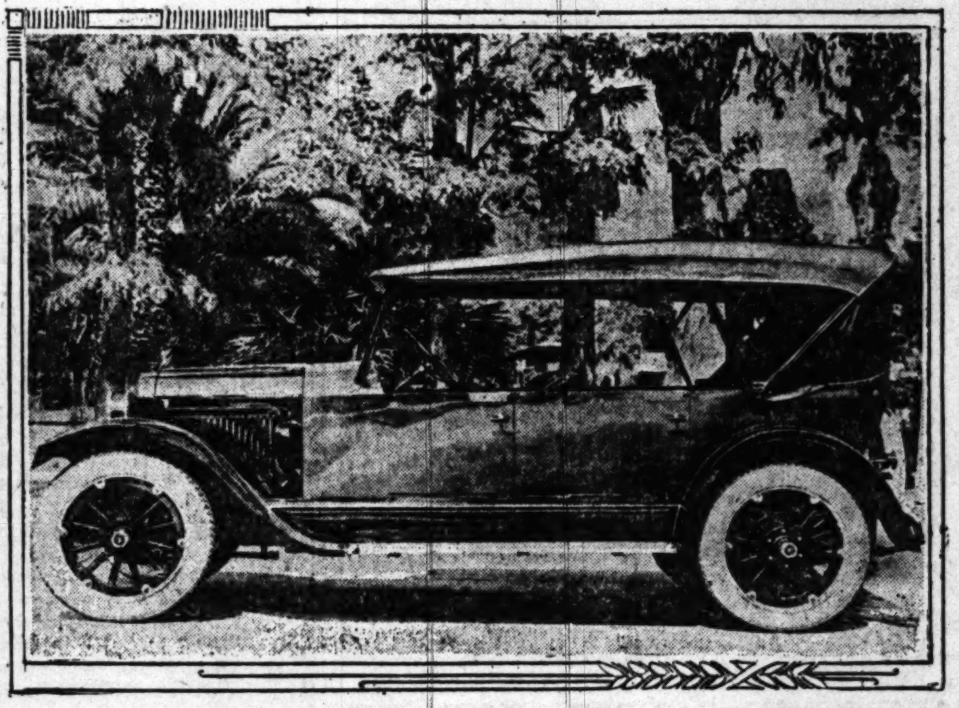
Coincident with the new price levels on Overland and Willys-Knight cars are announced two entirely new cars added to the Willys-Knight line, seven-passenger touring and sedan, and it is also declared that the company experienced the greatest flow of business ever in the months of July and August of this year, and at the end of August had passed the production mark set for the year's total in previous plans.

The new prices are certain to increase the demand greatly, says Flynn, and already the extra pressure for cars is being evidenced in Southern California. The biggest August in the history of the company shipped 14,007 cars out of the Toledo plant, coming close to equalling the highest month in the entire business, June, 1920, when 14,633 cars were sold.

"The amazing feature of this great business is that it by no means represents the capacity of the market," says Flynn. "Dealers are still oversold and clamoring for deliveries. That the public demand now felt is the keen and active interest of new car buyers coming into the market daily is made evident by the increasing requirements of dealers for closed cars for winter use.

"That the company, in the face of these facts, finds it possible to cut prices is an example of modern engineering efficiency for, without stinting quality in the slightest, the company has stepped up production schedules to a point where it is possible for them to produce more cars at a lower price. It is a realization of the ambition of Mr. John North Willys, who has expressed the wish that his cars reach the widest circle of buyers possible."

Better Car at a Lower Price



The New Willys-Knight Seven-Passenger Touring Car, Just Received

While it retains the familiar Willys-Knight general appearance a longer wheelbase gives it a lower appearance, at the same time giving it increased accommodations. Reductions on both Willys-Knight and Overland cars have just been announced by the factory.

BREAKS WORLD RECORD

Gene Walker riding an Indian broke the world's record for five miles on a half-mile track at South Bend., Ind., September 4, time, 5.7 3-5s. Previous record was made on this same track in August, 1920, time, 5.12.

INDIANA GOVERNOR PRAISES REPUBLIC

Gov. Warren T. McCray of Indiana is a user of Republic trucks, having several in use on his splendid farm.

"I am very glad to say that I have been using your trucks for the past five years with splendid satisfaction. The last truck purchased was probably two years ago and it has been running constantly with very little expense. I can cheerfully recommend the Republic Truck to any one who is looking for satisfaction and service."

DETROIT HUMS BUSILY AGAIN

let will use 2000 men and Fisher about 1800. Output on completion will be 500 cars a day.

At Cincinnati Chevrolet and Fisher will use a site comprising sixteen acres to erect two new buildings, one to be 200,000 feet in capacity and the other 50,000 feet. The second when completed soon after the first of the year, will produce 300 cars a day and employ 2100 men with a daily pay roll of $14,000.

The newly agreed upon export features of the United States tariff assuring equality of treatment in nonmanufacturing as well as industrial countries, will stimulate American trade abroad, according to J. Walter Drake, chairman of the foreign trade committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. Under the general export feature the newly lowered automobile rate of 25 per cent if conditions warranted, could be increased by one-half, bringing it up to a maximum of 37 1-2 per cent. If some manufacturing company were unwilling to allow a duty as low as 25 per cent on American vehicles in return for an equally low rate on its automobiles brought into the United States, steps could be taken to have a higher rate up to 37 1-2 per cent applied.

All signs point to a good fall and winter in the motor-truck business, in the opinion of W. L. Day, president and general manager of the General Motors Truck Company of Pontiac.

"Our own plant enjoyed the most prosperous August in several years and business on hand indicates continuous demand," said Mr. Day. "One of the noteworthy signs is that the business instead of being confined to the smaller capacity trucks, has shown a healthy demand for a heavier capacity.

"A combination of circumstances has arisen which greatly favors increasing sales in the heavier truck fifield and particularly in the tractor and trailer units. Legislation in a great many States has forced the contractor and road builder or other men engaged in the heavier hauling to abandon the heavy truck and resort to the tractor and trailer units, where the weight is spread over more wheels, and consequently the unit loads on the highways are less. Road building is going on with increasing speed throughout the South and this alone would tend to bring a greatly increased truck business.

Additional details of the expansion of the Fisher Body Company involving the erection of assembly plants at six points in the United States, which will be devoted to the manufacture of Chevrolet closed bodies, were announced this week by Fred J. Fisher, president of the world's largest body company.

The new assembly plants will be located at Oakland, Cal.; Buffalo, Flint, St. Louis, Janesville, Wis., and Cincinnati.

Tremendous growth of demand for Chevrolet closed cars is responsible for the new construction program, Mr. Fisher said. The new plants will give the Fisher companies 1,500,000 square feet of additional floor space and employ upward of 15,000 men.

"I might state," said Mr. Fisher, "that with the completion of these additional plants by January 1, it will enable us to meet the demand of upward of 1000 Chevrolet closed bodies a day."

Although the fiscal year of Packard Motor Car Company ended August 31, last, the annual report will not be ready for several weeks. It is known, however, that the results for the twelve months were pleasing. After setting aside adequate reserves, net earnings, it it believed will exceed $1,000,000. If no reduction in inventory values is called for the company's net may reach $1,500,000. This showing, however, does not reflect the true status of the company at the present time for it was not until May, the final month of the company's third quarter, that it began to receive the benefit from the sales of its new single six cars and from other products manufactured from materials at current low price levels.

At present Packard's net earnings are running in excess of $500,000 monthly and there is no indication of slackening in demand. In fact, the company, which is now operating on a production basis of about 2000 vehicles monthly, is planning a considerable increase in production. Record year for Packard was in 1920, when $6,275,000 was earned.

Long-distance driveaways are in order as a result of strike pressure. Peter E. Blow, distributor for Rickenbacker cars at Knoxville, Tenn., this week, started from the Detroit factory with a convoy of five cars, on which shipment was delayed. Other instances of long delivery drives over the highways are also reported from other plants. Some have been made to Boston and as far as Portland, Me. Vessel shipment is being resorted to by nearly all the Detroit plants with available steamers carrying capacity loads on each trip.

Cleveland Motor Company earned more than $1,000,000 in the first seven months of 1922, according to company officials. In the same period 6000 cars were shipped. During the past two months shipments have been at the rate of about 275 cars a week. No decided decrease in demand is looked for in the final quarter, and it is expected that approximately 3400 cars will be turned out, making the year's total about 10,000.

Ford Motor Car Company production for the first seven months of this year, exclusive of the Canadian plant was 688,028, compared with 554,727 for the same period a year ago. July domestic production was 136,646 cars and trucks as against 141,901 in June and 112,185 in July, 1921. Output at the six foreign branches during July was 6539 as against 6876 in June, 7170 in May and 6100 in July a year ago.

Despite the shopmen's strike, car loadings of automobiles for shipment by the Michigan Central Railroad from Detroit plants this year have far exceeded all past records. In the first eight months of 1922 a total of 55,045 carloads was shipped, compared with 25,724 in the same period a year ago. This is an increase of 14 per cent. August with 8557 loadings was the banner month exceeding the five preceding months in which the total ran well over 7000. During July the increase in car loadings was 72.37 per cent greater than that of the corresponding month last year, the figures being 7060 and 4072, respectively. In August the increase was 105.99 per cent. Loadings have shown an increase each month since January when 4058 cars were transported.

Complete figures on August automobile production revealed the month to have been the best August in the industry's history and the second biggest month of an unprecedented year. The figures 272,620, in addition with total output of the year up to July 31, reached the surprising mark of 1,671,418 for the first eight months or 2868 more than the entire year of 1921. Barring June, it is the highest monthly figure for the industry.

Total output of passenger cars and trucks for August is an increase of 12 per cent over July and 53 per cent more than for August a year ago.

Shipping records for August were 32,563 carloads, 36,602 driveaways and 10,034 by boat. Driveaway figures are the largest of the current year, being 7000 in July and 3000 greater than in June, month of banner output.

Coming on the eve of the closing of the Ford plants, the announcement of price reductions by the Willys-Overland virtually had the automotive industry by the ears. The second price cut of this year officials stated, was due to volume production. It affects both Willys-Knight and Overland motor cars. Willys-Overland has just completed the largest July and August in its history and has already built more cars than the entire year's schedule called for. The new Willys-Knight prices are the lowest at which any car equipped with a Knight sleeve-valve motor has ever sold. The reductions range up to $55 on Overland and $145 on Willys-Knight.

TRAP GUN AND ROD

BY TOM MARSHALL

[illegible] dusky Senegambians tabu coin diving and impersonate ca- [illegible] as duck retrievers. "Rocked in the lap of luxury," was the ver- [illegible] of Fred Gilbert, wizard of Spirit Lake, as we lay in our sagless [illegible] equipped berths aboard the good ship Beatrice M We were at [illegible] in the Matagorda Bay, our boat gently tugging at her chains [illegible] dipped and bowed on those miniature, undulating waves.

[illegible] at the time, house- [illegible] guests of Commodore Richard [illegible] of Milwaukee, universally [illegible] as a high-class sportsman [illegible] congenial gentleman, equally [illegible] in crushing "tar-hawks" or [illegible] a mallard out of the sky. [illegible] couple of days we had been [illegible] on the Gulf of Mexico, [illegible] tarpon. We had met with [illegible] results, although we [illegible] failed to hook on to a "Silver [illegible]" which had broken or tied [illegible] fish. No cruiser along the [illegible] Coast, boasted of more elab- [illegible] or complete outfit on sports- [illegible] accessories than the boat [illegible] which we were guests.

[illegible] necessities were in evi- [illegible] from dry fly books to exag- [illegible] shark tackle. A sugges- [illegible] coupled with five minutes [illegible] changed the order from fish- [illegible] shooting and we soon left [illegible], heading through an is- [illegible] Matagorda Bay, where [illegible] scheduled for a duck hunt. [illegible] both engines coming full [illegible] ahead, we annihilated space, [illegible] turbines churned the wa- [illegible] foam. After rounding the [illegible] we were in tranquil waters, [illegible] with migratory birds. [illegible] thousands milled in midair.

PARK THE CRUISER

[illegible] the north side of the bay, [illegible] a land protected bayou, [illegible] we parked our cruiser. [illegible] anchors were set both for- [illegible] and aft, a semiprotection [illegible] tropical typhoons, which [illegible] that section are prevalent. [illegible] at anchor, we secured guns, [illegible], decoys and boats, car- [illegible] the upper deck, immediately [illegible] for reeds along the shore [illegible] where we had located the [illegible] dropping in to feed.

[illegible] and I were in the boat, [illegible] "Dusky Tom," a 16-year-old [illegible], acting punter and retriver. [illegible] located our boat and decoys [illegible] there was about two feet of [illegible], growing much deeper a short [illegible] out. Tom, acting retriver, [illegible] located the incoming [illegible] quickly gathering those we [illegible] down. He swam by sight, [illegible] by scent, diving for cripples [illegible] both eyes open, he let few birds evade hmi. Tom was staunch, reliable, tenacious and inured to cold water. He had one marked advantage over any Chesapeake dog that I ever shot over; after crawling into the boat, he never shook himself, thus deluging us with cold water. Merrill had Tom well broken.

Our grass-covered boat was solidly staked down at both ends, eliminating alibis. Every shot missed was a case of mismanagement or a mistake in shooting judgment. We specialized on canvas back and red head, based on culinary reputation, rapidity of flight and desire to visit our decoys. Mark, south! Seven "cans" were headed directly for our decoys, swinging before they entered the zone of danger, flying out to sea a short distance, turned and they dashed back, exactly as we wanted them to come.

FOUR BULLSEYES

Four whip like reports so nearly together they sounded like a rapid fire gun. Four bronzed slant heads, lay upon the water, awaiting "Dusky Tom's" services. We selected shots, passing up mallards, springs and widgeon. Red heads and canvasback of the male persuasion were the only birds that tempted us. "Eye wipes" were infrequent, very difficult to explain away, as there was little chance for a shower of good reasons.

Fred Gilbert is the best duck shot I have ever seen press a trigger and the best caller that ever attempted the duck language, seldom failing to call them within the danger zone, if they have the least inclination to light. This accomplishment is of inestimable value and advantage in duck shooting.

Fred's ability to call and shoot was the secret of much of our success on that hunt. During our absence from the boat, they had raked up a half barrel of gulf oysters. Have you ever slipped a lip over those gulf bivalves? If not, there is something coming to you, in the line of a real delicacy. Our meals were flavored with hunters' "gab fest" which fully covered every phase of the day's hunt.

Our second day's hunt was a repetition of the first, covering the Texan bag limit on red head and "cans" which we had no trouble in annexing, with the assistance of Tom, our dusky retriever. Weighing anchors, we headed for Rockfort, Tex., a little city Merrill had adopted as a temporary home, when ashore. We were met at the dock by Mrs. Merrill, who entertained us as house guests for a couple of days. Meeting in the interim, Richards, many sportsmen friends of Rockport, the home of our Senegambian retriever.

Question: In one of your articles read where you said bull geese or cormorants were used for fishing by Chinese. How do they handle the birds and how do they keep them from swallowing fish?
Chicago. DALE RICHTER.

Answer: Yes, cormorant are utilized by the Chinese in the capture of fish. They become so expert in their diving and grabbing they furnish many fish for the open market. Chinaman teaches the birds to stand on gunwale of the boat, usually about six or eight on each side. Around the neck of the birds, located well down toward their body, is a small strap which they tighten when the bird is ready to be launched. This prevents the bird swallowing fish below the strap. Tossed or forced from the boat, swimming around until they locate their victim, then dive below the surface and virtually outswim the fish. After catching a fish they are trained to immediately return to the boat. The coolie boatman grabs his bird, makes him disgorge the fish and again starts him out on his fishing expedition. With from twelve to twenty birds swimming about on the water, diving and returning with a fish every few minutes, the owner of the birds is kept quite busy. He ejects the small scaled beauties from the bird's neck, inculcating the spirit of continuous industry, by the empty stomach and hunger route. The above facts were recited to me by Ted Doremus, with the Dupont Powder Co., who is now located in China. Ted has accompanied the coolies in the boats when they are fishing. He has seen the birds at work and will vouch for the reliability of above story. No aquatic bird has more intelligence than cormorants. When once seen throwing a cork line of birds around a school of fish, then with flapping wings and unusual noises drive them directly ashore, where they stage a fish banquet, there will be no question about cormorants' ability to reason.

Wreck Fails to Materialize

"Playing with the Gears" in a Maxwell at 18 to 20 Miles an Hour

Representatives of Union Motors, Maxwell distributors, staged a spectacular demonstration last Sunday at Thirty-ninth and Figueroa streets, in which the driver of a new car reversed his gears while traveling at a speed of eighteen to twenty miles an hour—then when the car had started backward, repeated the operation by throwing into high without touching his clutch.

MAXWELLS NOT WRECKED

Several thousand owners and prospective owners of automobiles visited the corner of Thirty-ninth and Figueroa streets last Sunday in expectation of seeing one or more automobiles completely wrecked. They were disappointed, but they did see a demonstratiin of sturdiness and quality construction that sent them away thoroughly sold on the ability of the new Maxwell to stand up under severe punishment without the slightest damage.

Sales Manager C. A. Doyle put his two cars through their paces as if he didn't care much whether they held together or not. For really severe treatment nothing like this exhibition has ever before been seen in Los Angeles. The cars were speeded up to eighteen or twenty miles an hour in high gear and then, without touching the clutch pedal, a shift was made direct into reverse, the cars shivering and throwing up a cloud of dust as they started backward. As soon as they were moving backward at speed the lever was thrown back into high—they "shimmied" again and started forward. This was repeated many times with both cars and no effort was made to save the gears from punishment.

After the test had been made time after time, the gearcase was opened for inspection and all who cared were given an opportunity of looking them over for marks or cracks.

This same test was put on the preceding day on Ocean avenue at Long Beach by J. L. Bramila, the Maxwell dealer in that city, absolutely new cars being used for the stunt. The cars were shot back and forth in front of the crowd as fast as gears could be jammed back and forth and the cars get under way forward or backward. The stunt was performed a score or more times with each car and then the transmission gears were taken out and passed around among the crowd for inspection. Aside from slight burrs made on the face of the gears through forcing them into mesh regardless of engine speed, they showed absolutely no damage whatever. The performance created quite a stir both in Los Angeles and Long Beach, as no other car, so far as known, has ever before been able to carry through such a test successfully.

CONSISTENT AVERAGE

Reports on gasoline economy made by Chevrolet owners to the J. V. Baldwin Company indicate that owners are getting an average of about twenty-three miles per gallon, according to Manager Andrew Baldwin. This is an average recently made by the cross-continent test car of the Chevrolet factory.

MOUNTAIN LAKES HOME OF GOLDENS

No Other Spot in the High Sierras Quite Comparable for Gorgeous Trout

BY OUTDOOR FRANKLIN

One of the best fishing spots in the Sierra Nevadas is Cottonwood Lakes, high up in the heart of the lofty range and tucked away in a basin formed by a prehistoric glacier.

C B Dixon

The lakes are famous for the crystal clearness of the icy water and the golden trout, which inhabit them. Lying in a chain of eight in a district not over a square mile in extent the lakes form a series of steps, each being from one to seven acres in extent.

Melting snow from the slopes of Mt. Langley supply the water to these beautiful bodies, situated at an elevation of 10,500 to 11,000 feet. In the early seventies the lakes were stocked with a few golden trout and they thrived and grew, gradually taking on a more lustrous color.

In 1918 the Fish and Game Commission placed racks and traps to catch the fish as they ascended the Cottonwood Creek to spawn. About 500,000 eggs were taken to the Mt. Whitney hatchery, the fry later being distributed to different streams and lakes in the Mt. Whitney district.

The successful propagation of the golden trout was due entirely to the efforts of George McCloud, who had charge of the collecting, raising and distribution of the Golden trout in the Mt. Whitney hatchery.

It is a peculiar fact that while the lakes are separated by a narrow neck of land, that in each lake the fish take on a different color, and a fisherman familiar with the country can immediately identify the lake from which a particular fish was taken by its coloring.

It is not hard a trip to this wonderland, the trip requiring two days from Los Angeles. From either Olancha or the mouth of Cottonwood Creek Canyon, pack trains can be secured.

The trail is steep in places, but it is well defined and perfectly safe, is seventeen miles long and requires a full day's time going up and from five to six hours to come down.

We were lucky enough to secure the services of O. J. Nelson, a packer of many years' experience in these mountains, who took us in and out without a single mishap or the loss of an article. In my recent trip I was accompanied by C. B. Dixon, manager of the Hollywood branch of Howard Automobile Company, who was fortunate enough to secure a beautifully colored golden trout, weighing two pounds.

EARLY TIRE DOPE BADLY SHATTERED

Latest statistics of the year's total tire production for the country place the figures at 36,000,000. This far exceeds tire predictions made earlier in the year. At the beginning, the most conservative estimated production as low as 26,000,000 and certainly not above 28,000,000. Even the most optimistic halted at 33,000,000.

During one month of the summer the Akron district alone turned out 2,750,000 tires. Miller tire men claim that the volume of production for several recent periods has exceeded anything for like periods in the past. Rubber companies have met the big present issue—the country-wide demand for good tires at reduced prices.

Standard of the World

More and more Buyers are attracted by Type 61 Value

THERE is one very safe and sure guide to follow in selecting a quality automobile, and that is the number of people buying it.

In this respect, as in others, the majority is usually right, and its choice of a quality automobile is usually the right choice.

One need only refer to the number of people buying the Cadillac to know that it enjoys this majority preference.

The fact is that more people are purchasing the Type 61 Cadillac than purchased any previous Cadillac model.

What is even more important, sales of the Type 61 exceed those of all other cars combined selling at the Cadillac price or higher.

Such a conclusive expression of favor for the new Cadillac, we believe, has a significance which cannot well be mistaken.

It means that the public recognizes in Type 61 a new high point in Cadillac efficiency and value.

And it means that an ever-increasing majority of buyers of high-grade cars regard Type 61 as the greatest automobile value in the world.

MAXIMUM COMPRESSION
MAXIMUM POWER
REDUCTION IN FUEL LOSSES PAST PISTON
MINIMUM DILUTION OF CRANKCASE OIL

For better compression use better Oil

Good compression can only be secured by correct lubrication—by maintaining a constant lubricating film between the piston and the cylinder wall. This not only reduces friction, but prevents the escape of gases into the crankcase, with consequent loss of power.

Comparative tests with a Sprague Dynamometer show that Zerolene maintains a piston seal that develops full compression. Because of its natural characteristics and exceptional purity and stability, Zerolene maintains full cylinder compression under all operating conditions, whether the piston clearance is small or comparatively large.

The recommendations embodied in the Zerolene Correct Lubrication Chart are calculated with the greatest precision, and if Zerolene is used in accordance with them, correct lubrication and maximum fuel mileage are assured.

AMONG THE FANS

W. J. Nichols has returned from a three months' pleasure trip through the Eastern States.

W. A. Pilcher of Montana was a visitor at the clubrooms this week. Mr. Pilcher won the State checker championship of Kansas in 1910 and the city championship of Denver in 1921.

C. N. Moulton of Pasadena, and a prominent member of the tourist club there, took a trip back to his old home in Vermont last July. His friends did not guess the real reason of his trip until they received word a few days ago that he had won the State championship of Vermont, defeating Mr. C. R. Hoag in a tourney held at White River Junction, Vt. Mr. Hoag had held the championship for the last four years.

Mr. S. A. Wheeler of this city was in Washington last month and met Angus Crawford, the Canadian champion, while he was giving exhibitions in Tacoma and Seattle. Mr. Crawford expects to attend the tourney in Boston, but informed Mr. Wheeler that next year he planned to tour California and would spend most of his time in Los Angeles.

CHESS TOURNEY

A. J. Fink of San Francisco won the State chess championship in the tourney which was started here September 4 on the eighth floor of the Los Angeles Athletic Club and ended the same place on the night of the 15th. Along with the championship, Mr. Fink was burdened with a gold medal, $100 in cash and the "first leg" on a "three-legged" silver cup. The latter must have been won three times by the same party before they are compelled to claim it as their individual property.

H. Borochow and R. F. Lyons tied for second and third places and divided $135. H. Shrader of San Diego won fourth place and was presented with $60, and S. Mlotkowski of Los Angeles and B. Smith of San Francisco had to take care of the rest of the prize money, which amounted to $50.

Donald Mugridge, E. W. Grabill, R. R. Perry, G. Patterson, C. H. Whipple and J. T. Smyth had no additional burdens thrust upon them and, in "horse racing" parlance, would have been classed as "also rans." Donald Mugridge, however, had a very narrow escape, as only his presence of mind in losing the last day permitted him finishing outside of the prize money.

R. G. Adams, another strong player of the L.A.A.C., but whose business interests prevented him from entering the tourney, wanted to challenge the winner for $1000 a side, but friends finally prevailed on him to withhold the challenge for the present, as all seemed to think Mr. Fink had already assumed more than his share of hardships, and that it would be asking too much of him to attempt to carry another $1000 back to San Francisco.

The following game and annotations were contributed, by request, by A. J. Fink, who was unfortunate enough to win the above-mentioned tourney:

Opening—Vienna.

White—H. Shrader.	Black—A. J. Fink.
1—P-K4	P-K4
2—Kt-QB3	Kt-KB3
3—P-B4	P-Q4
4—PxKP	KtxP
5—B-Kt5-ch	Kt-B3-a
6—Q-B3	KtxKt
7—QPxKt	B-K2
8—Kt-K2	B-QB4
9—P-QKt4	B-Kt3
10—P-QB4	P-QR3
11—BxKt-ch	PxB
12—P-B5	B-R2
13—Q-Kt3	R-Kt-b
14—B-B-c	Q-K2
15—B-Kt5	P-B3
16—B-R4-d	Castles
17—Q-Q3	K-Kt2
18—PxP-e	PxP
19—Castles	B-Kt5-f
20—QR-K-g	QR-Q
21—Kt-Kt3	QxR-ch
22—RxQ	RxR-ch
23—K-Kt2	B-Kt2
24—P-R3-h	R-Q8
25—B-Q2	B-Q2
26—Kt-B	RxP
27—P-R4	RxKKt3-i
28—QxP	KRxKt
29—QxR	B-K5-ch
30—Resigns-j

a—P-B3 instead would give White a good game by KtxKt. This line of attack is new (at least it is not found in the books) and has been analyzed to a win by Mr. Shrader.

b—Not P-Kt3 on account of B-Kt5, followed by B-B6 with the preferable game.

c—B-B6 would be answered by K-B.

d—If PxP, then PxP; and now if RxP; White loses the exchange by B-Kt5; if BxP, then RxQ; BxQ; RxKtP; R-B8; KxB; RxR; B-K6 winning.

e—QxQRP would again be followed by B-Kt5, or perhaps PxP first.

f—Not RxP on account of B-K threatening B-Kt3.

g—R-Q2 best.

h—Fatal; White overlooks the tieing up of queen and bishop.

i—RxKt, QxR; BxB would give White a chance as P-B5 would put the bishop on B2 out of commission.

j—Mate or the loss of the queen follows, viz.: B-B8, RxB-ch, now if KxB then P-Q5-ch. If K-Kt3 then PxP-ch. If K-R2 then PxP.

COLLINS IS INSISTENT

Richard H. Collins, president of the Peerless Motor Car Company, has always insisted upon the finest degree of accuracy in the manufacturing of parts, and this same policy is maintained in the manufacture of the new Peerless eight which has created such a furore in the automotive world, according to Stanley W. Smith of Stanley W. Smith, Inc., Peerless distributors for Southern California.

"Every part that enters into the construction of the new Peerless is inspected so thoroughly that the time required to pass on the parts in a single car would amount to a full week's time for one man," he said. "A large force of experts is busy at all times with their micrometers and gauges, measuring limits of variations down to five-ten-thousandths of an inch, or a fraction of the thickness of a hair. These delicate instruments are themselves constantly checked for accuracy by an inspector, using the famous Johannson blocks.

"No parts of the car are on the 'free list,' which means accepted without inspection. There are nearly 1000 dimensions that are not allowed to vary more than five-ten-thousandths of an inch, and thousands more whose limits are one-thousandth of an inch. All parts with decimal dimensions without limits shown, are held to limits of three-thousandths of an inch.

"For instance, suppose the normal diameter of a part to be three inches and the limit of variation five-ten-thousandths, or one-half-thousandth of an inch. By some manufacturers this is interpreted to mean that if the part is made one-half-thousandth of an inch over or one-half-thousandth of an inch under, it would come within the allowable limits. By the Peerless method on the other hand, the part would be allowed to go only one-quarter-thousandth of an inch under. Workmanship so infinitesimally precise as this is possible of attainment only with a combination of highly skilled craftsmen and modern machinery such as is to be found in the Peerless works."

Foulke Shows Templar Head Around South

"The way California is absorbing automobiles this year is astonishing," declares W. E. Young, western representative of the Templar Motors Corporation of Cleveland, who is now in Los Angeles making his headquarters with the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Templar distributor for Southern California.

"Automobile manufacturers have come to realize that this State is one of the greatest automobile markets in the country. Through the business depression California, and particularly Southern California, was buying automobiles when other sections were in the doldrums. That one fact alone made a deep impression upon the industry for it showed the remarkable degree of prosperity that exists here.

"The Templar has come to be recognized as the one fine car in the small car class, and the orders that are constantly pouring into the Templar plant attest this fact. The new Templar factory is one of the finest and most up-to-date in the entire industry."

In company with Leland S. Foulke, head of the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Young made a trip over a large part of this territory. He predicts that Southern California dealers will have a record breaking business this winter.

ABOUT HAMMER RAPS

The amateur repairman can do more damage around an engine with a hammer in a few minutes than an expert repairman can fix up in a week, warns Don P. Smith of the W. P. Herbert Company distributors of the Chandler-Cleveland line. He says that care should be exercised in the use of the machinist's hammer which forms a part of the tool equipment of all automobiles.

AMONG THE FANS

W. J. Nichols has returned from a three months' pleasure trip through the Eastern States.

W. A. Pilcher of Montana was a visitor at the clubrooms this week. Mr. Pilcher won the State checker championship of Kansas in 1910 and the city championship of Denver in 1921.

C. N. Moulton of Pasadena, and a prominent member of the tourist club there, took a trip back to his old home in Vermont last July. His friends did not guess the real reason of his trip until they received word a few days ago that he had won the State championship of Vermont, defeating Mr. C. R. Hoag in a tourney held at White River Junction, Vt. Mr. Hoag had held the championship for the last four years.

Mr. S. A. Wheeler of this city was in Washington last month and met Angus Crawford, the Canadian champion, while he was giving exhibitions in Tacoma and Seattle. Mr. Crawford expects to attend the tourney in Boston, but informed Mr. Wheeler that next year he planned to tour California and would spend most of his time in Los Angeles.

CHESS TOURNEY

A. J. Fink of San Francisco won the State chess championship in the tourney which was started here September 4 on the eighth floor of the Los Angeles Athletic Club and ended the same place on the night of the 15th. Along with the championship, Mr. Fink was burdened with a gold medal, $100 in cash and the "first leg" on a "three-legged" silver cup. The latter must have been won three times by the same party before they are compelled to claim it as their individual property.

H. Borochow and R. F. Lyons tied for second and third places and divided $135. H. Shrader of San Diego won fourth place and was presented with $60, and S. Miotkowski of Los Angeles and B. Smith of San Francisco had to take care of the rest of the prize money, which amounted to $50.

Donald Mugridge, E. W. Grabill, R. R. Perry, G. Patterson, C. H. Whipple and J. T. Smyth had no additional burdens thrust upon them and, in "horse racing" parlance, would have been classed as "also rans." Donald Mugridge, however, had a very narrow escape, as only his presence of mind in losing the last day permitted him finishing outside of the prize money.

R. G. Adams, another strong player of the L.A.A.C., but whose business interests prevented him from entering the tourney, wanted to challenge the winner for $1000 a side, but friends finally prevailed on him to withhold the challenge for the present, as all seemed to think Mr. Fink had already assumed more than his share of hardships, and that it would be asking too much of him to attempt to carry another $1000 back to San Francisco.

The following game and annotations were contributed, by request, by A. J. Fink, who was unfortunate enough to win the above-mentioned tourney:

COLLINS IS INSISTENT

Richard H. Collins, president of the Peerless Motor Car Company, has always insisted upon the finest degree of accuracy in the manufacturing of parts, and this same policy is maintained in the manufacture of the new Peerless eight, which has created such a furore in the automotive world, according to Stanley W. Smith of Stanley W. Smith, Inc., Peerless distributors for Southern California.

"Every part that enters into the construction of the new Peerless is inspected so thoroughly that the time required to pass on the parts in a single car would amount to a full week's time for one man," he said. "A large force of experts is busy at all times with their micrometers and gauges, measuring limits of variations down to five-ten-thousandths of an inch, or a fraction of the thickness of a hair. These delicate instruments are themselves constantly checked for accuracy by an inspector, using the famous Johannson blocks.

"No parts of the car are on the 'free list,' which means accepted without inspection. There are nearly 1000 dimensions that are not allowed to vary more than five-ten-thousandths of an inch, and thousands more whose limits are one-thousandth of an inch. All parts with decimal dimensions without limits shown, are held to limits of three-thousandths of an inch.

"For instance, suppose the normal diameter of a part to be three inches and the limit of variation five-ten-thousandths, or one-half-thousandth of an inch. By some manufacturers this is interpreted to mean that if the part is made one-half-thousandth of an inch over or one-half-thousandth of an inch under, it would come within the allowable limits. By the Peerless method on the other hand, the part would be allowed to go only one-quarter-thousandth of an inch under. Workmanship so infinitesimally precise as this is possible of attainment only with a combination of highly skilled craftsmen and modern machinery such as is to be found in the Peerless works."

Foulke Shows Templar Head Around South

"The way California is absorbing automobiles this year is astonishing," declares W. E. Young, western representative of the Templar Motors Corporation of Cleveland, who is now in Los Angeles making his headquarters with the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Templar distributor for Southern California.

"Automobile manufacturers have come to realize that this State is one of the greatest automobile markets in the country. Through the business depression California, and particularly Southern California, was buying automobiles when other sections were in the doldrums. That one fact alone made a deep impression upon the industry for it showed the remarkable degree of prosperity that exists here.

"The Templar has come to be recognized as the one fine car in the small car class, and the orders that are constantly pouring into the Templar plant attest this fact. The new Templar factory is one of the finest and most up-to-date in the entire industry."

In company with Leland S. Foulke, head of the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Young made a trip over a large part of this territory. He predicts that Southern California dealers will have a record breaking business this winter.

ABOUT HAMMER RAPS

The amateur repairman can do more damage around an engine with a hammer in a few minutes than an expert repairman can fix up in a week, warns Don P. Smith of the W. P. Herbert Company distributors of the Chandler-Cleveland line. He says that care should be exercised in the use of the machinist's hammer which forms a part of the tool equipment of all automobiles.

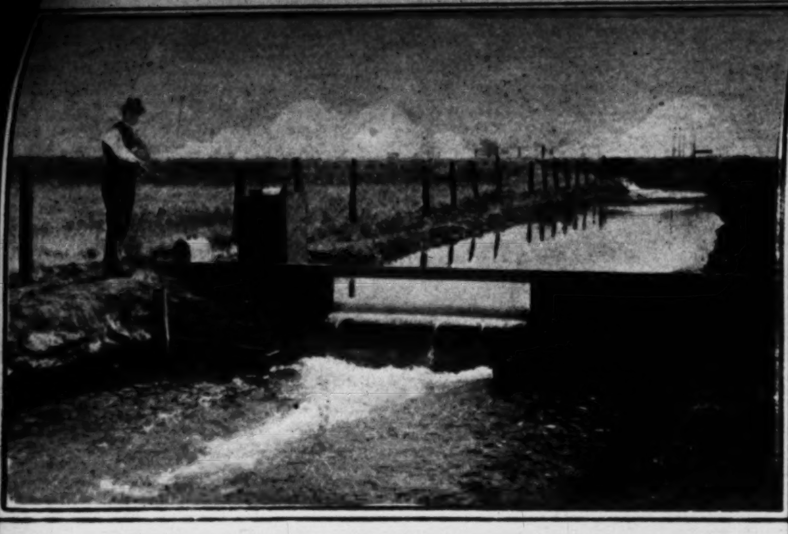
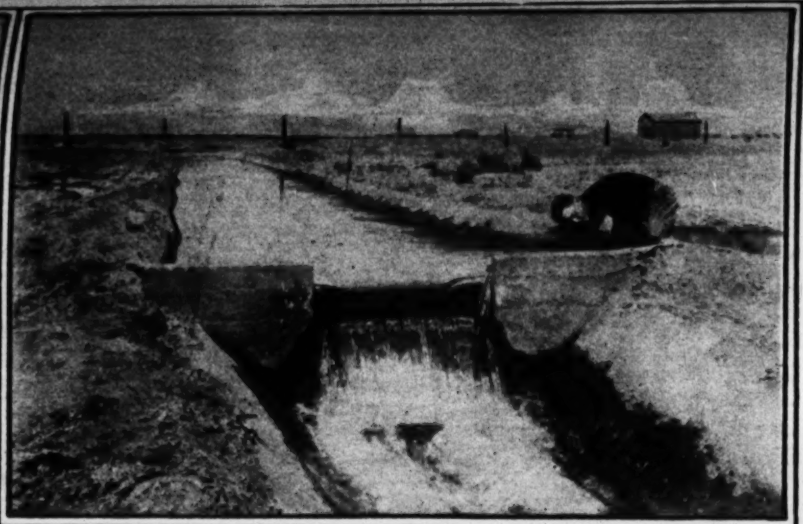
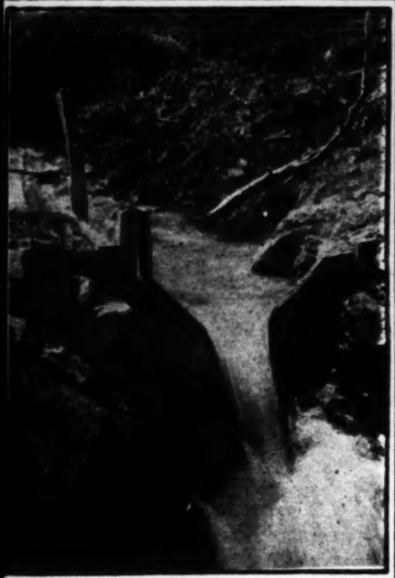
Devices Used in Measuring the Flow of Irrigation Water



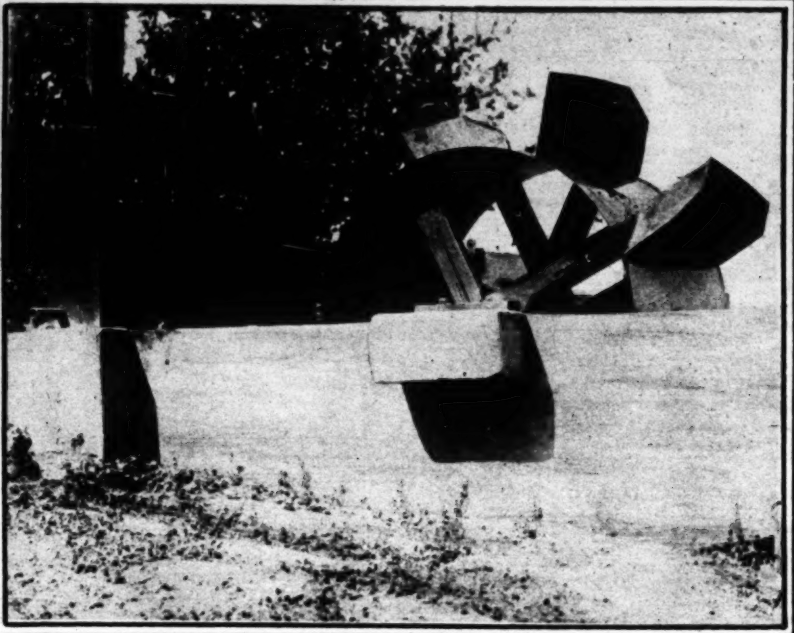
When a continuous record of water flow is required a water register is sometimes set up on a weir. This register gives a pencil record of the rise and fall of the stream.



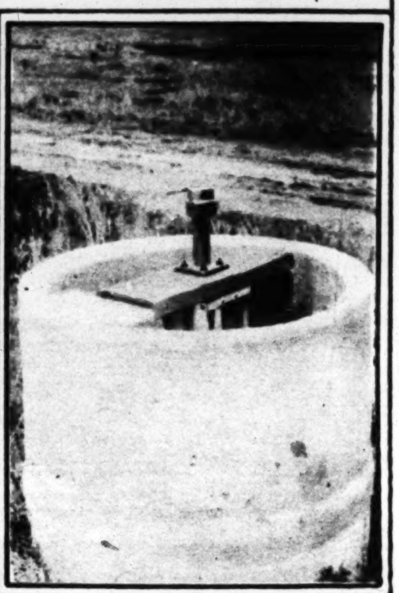
In canals where considerable fall is available a rectangular weir is constructed. The observer is reading the depth of water as it pours over the crest.



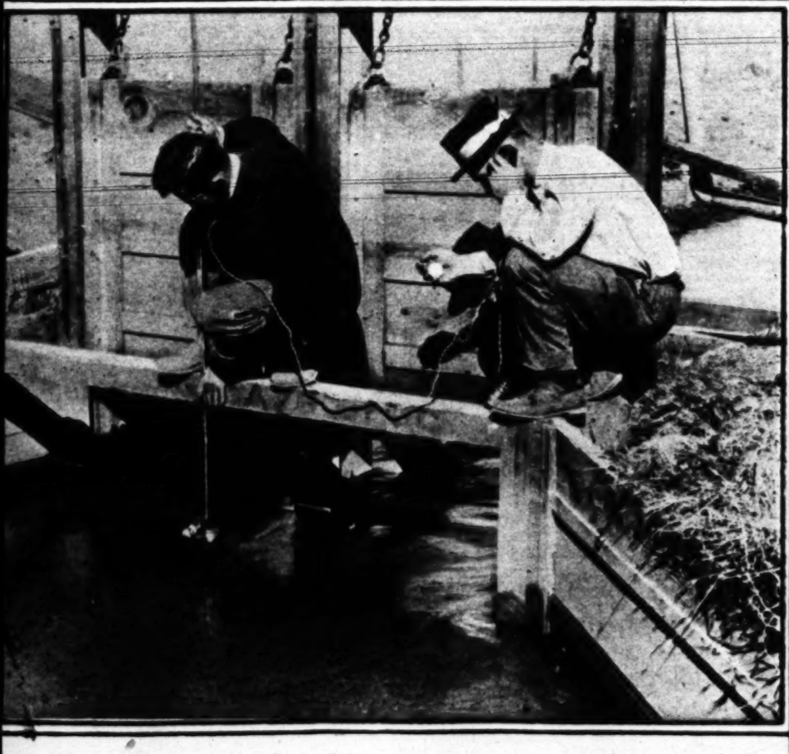
Triangular weirs are suited to measuring small streams, and are accurate in the measurement of flows as small as 25 gallons per minute.



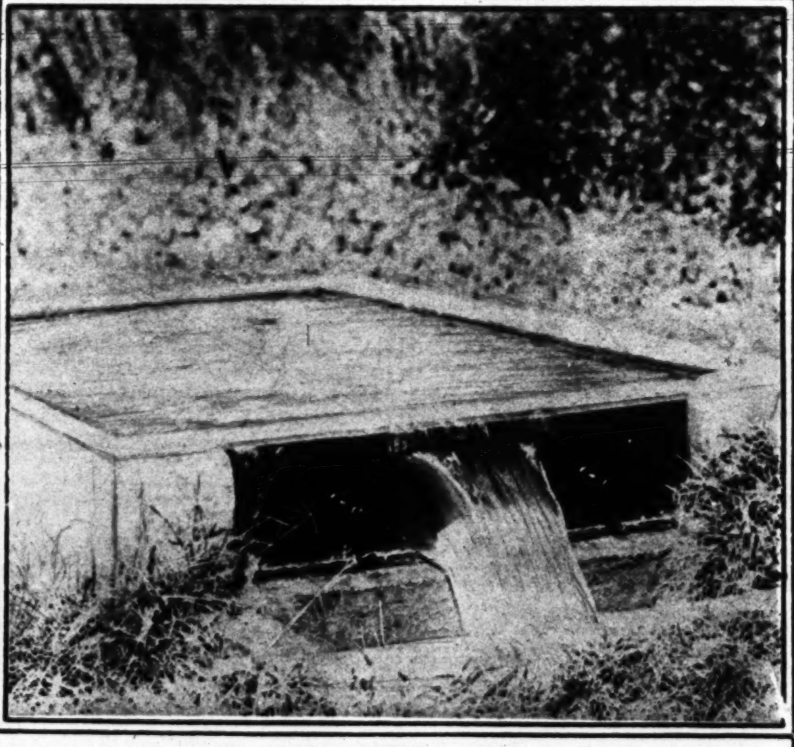
The Dithridge meter is very popular in Australia, but is practically unknown in this country. The big wheel revolves by the action of the stream and records the revolution on a "counter."



Many mechanical devices have been invented which give the discharge through a pipe line in terms of acre feet, in place of gallons per minute or miner's inches. The device here is installed on a concrete stand pipe.



In large canals with but little fall, a current meter must be resorted to. This instrument records the velocity of water as it passes a certain point. The discharge can be readily computed.



The Riverside Water Company's measuring box is a cheap and accurate device for measuring water in terms of miner's inches.

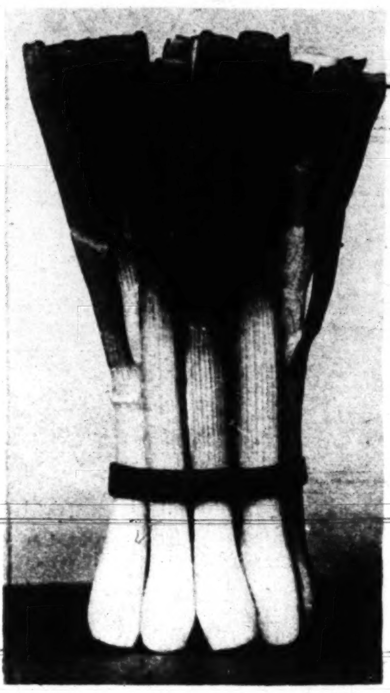
By ROSS H. GAST

Plowing up Bermuda onions in the Coachella Valley. Onions planted in September and October thrive under a wide range of soil and climatic conditions in Southern California.

ONIONS are almost indispensable in the daily menu, being used in a great many ways for culinary purposes, and are probably second only to potatoes in popularity. Green onions can be planted any month of the year in Southern California, while most gardeners raise enough of the "drys" to supply their table at all times.

This article covers only the home garden planting of this vegetable, for the commercial culture differs somewhat. The onion has been one of the principal commercial crops of California for many years.

Light, rich and well drained soils are best adapted to onion culture, but the seed can be planted on any of the garden soils if necessary, and will produce satisfactorily if given intelligent care. For dry onions, the lighter varieties should be selected if possible, for, if the soil is rich enough, they produce better shaped bulbs. Poultry manure is a valuable fertilizer for onions, but should never be used until it is thoroughly dried out. Manures are better than commercial fertilizers for home garden purposes, especially for the initial application, for they improve the texture, as well as add to the fertility of the soil. Manures do not need to be turned under as deeply for onions as is necessary for other crops. About two pounds of the poultry manure to the square yard may be raked into the surface of soil before planting.

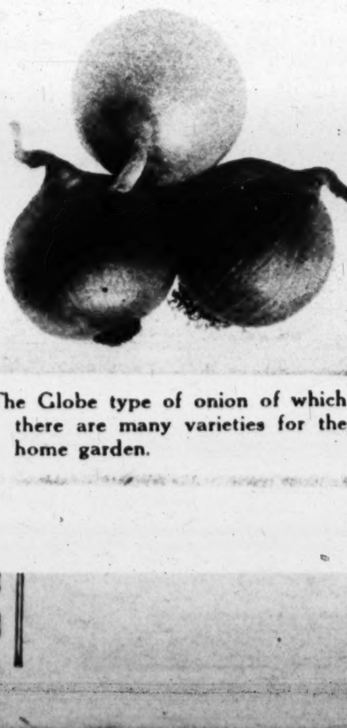


When you want to grow these, ask for Bunching onion seed.

Onions can be grown from seed, and thinned, or from transplanted seedlings, or from sets. Local commercial growers plant the seed and set the plants the desired distance apart in the row. When grown from sets, the dry onions do not keep well, but, when all things are considered, it is perhaps the best method for the home garden.

Growing onions from seed, for dry onions, or for green onions requires the same preparation. The green, or bunching onion, is a different variety, and when the seed of this variety is purchased, the gardener should ask for it under that name. They can be planted any month of the year.

Prepare the soil as for the root crops, by flooding the plot to be planted and spading it up more thoroughly than for most vegetables. Make up double rows fourteen inches across the top and two and a half feet apart, center to center. Plant the seed in drills, covering them a quarter of an inch deep and providing a good dry mulch. Be certain that the seed is planted in moist soil, for germination is sometimes difficult, especially in soils which are liable to bake.



The Globe type of onion of which there are many varieties for the home garden.

A veteran gardener and his Riverside Sweet Spanish onions.

Onion sets are the result of sowing the seed very thick, then forgetting them. That is, they are not thinned, or cultivated, consequently they never mature to normal size. The best time to plant seed for sets is in the spring, so that they will get a good start before summer comes on and then, if no water is given them during the hot months, they do not develop. The best system of planting sets is the open bed system. Plant the sets on double rows, spacing them three inches apart. They need not be covered over a half inch deep. Care for them as recommended below.

When growing bulb onions from seed, the seedlings should be thinned out when three inches high, and those taken out can be transplanted in another row. Cultivate them frequently, remembering that they must have sufficient water, and that it should be applied in furrows and not allowed to become flooded. As the bulbs increase in size, draw a little soil over them. When onions mature properly, the necks shrivel up and the tops fall over. It is usually advisable to break them over when the bulbs have nearly attained the desired size.

Bunching onions do not make bulbs, but should be used as soon as they are a half inch in diameter. A quick way of securing green onions of fair quality is to plant the whole bulb of the common drys. In a few weeks they will send up several stems, which can be used immediately.

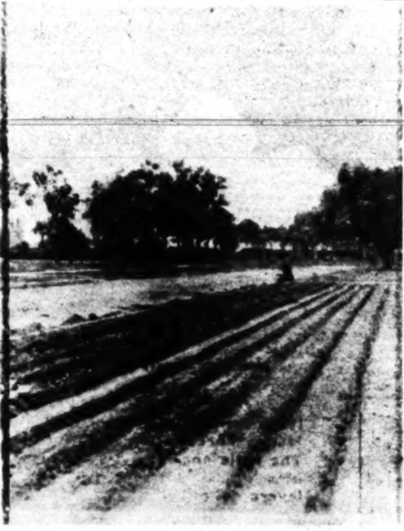
The onion thrip causes the leaves to turn gray and wither. A 6 per cent strength of nicotine sulphate dust is the surest control. Downey mildew is hard to control in the winter, but Bordeaux sprays are sometimes effective.

Dry onions can be stored in boxes, in any cool, dry place. Some sort of covering should be put over them.

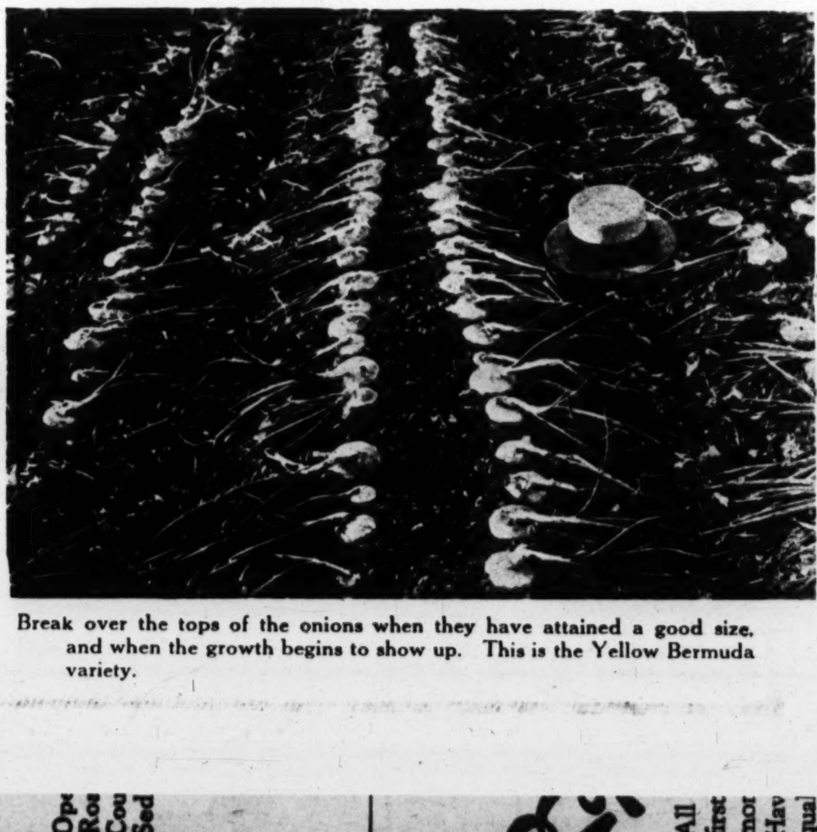
The Riverside Sweet Spanish is one of the best onions for the home garden. G. D. Ensign, veteran Los Angeles gardener, who raises a large quantity of them for neighborhood sale, had very good results with them this year. His crop averaged high in production, and the bulbs were immense. The best feature of this onion is its flavor. It is sweet and mild and especially desirable for salads. It is a globe-shaped onion and, in addition to its other merits, is a good keeper.

The Prizetaker, Yellow Australian, Crystal Wax, Yellow Bermuda, and Southport White Globe are all good varieties for the home gardener to plant. And do not forget to ask for the bunching onion when seed is desired for green onions. The Southport White Globe can be planted for green onions and will be very satisfactory if not left too long in the soil.

Plant onion sets in September, and they will mature in February and March. Seed for bulbs should be planted in December or January. They will mature by September.



How to make up ridges for planting onions. They should be 14 inches across on top, and two and one-half feet from center to center.



Break over the tops of the onions when they have attained a good size, and when the growth begins to show up. This is the Yellow Bermuda variety.

FUTURE OF KERN'S AGRICULTURE DEPENDS ON PUMP IRRIGATION

BAKERSFIELD.—Some of the most modern farms in California are located in Kern county. While gravity water is available for irrigating in some areas, the future of Kern county agriculturally depends upon pump irrigation. This fact is evidenced by figures showing the rapid increase in the number of acres placed under electric pumps during a period of fifteen months. There were 46,698 acres electrically irrigated in Kern county on January 31, 1921. This acreage had increased to a total of 77,964 on April 30, 1922, showing an average monthly increase of 1,950 acres. In order to adequately serve this additional acreage, the connected agricultural load was increased from 7,783 to 12,994 horsepower, an average monthly increase of 326 horsepower. During this 15-month period the number of agricultural consumers nearly doubled, increasing from 683 to 1,064, an average monthly increase of 23.8 consumers.

Kern county is the scene of a number of large farm projects. One is that of the Di Giorgio Farms Company, said to be one of the largest single viticultural enterprises in the West. Approximately four million dollars will be spent in developing this huge acreage in the Weed Patch. Already 2,700 acres have been planted to vines and trees, and 50 miles of irrigation lines and trenches laid to distribute the electrically-pumped water from the nine deep wells. Eventually 3,400 acres of table grapes, deciduous fruits and melons will be planted. Plans embrace a precooling plant, seven miles of railroad and a private telephone system.

The Herbert Hoover ranch of 2,500 acres, near Wasco, is another thoroughly modern farm where electric power is scientifically put to work. Eight wells on the property are each operated by a 25-horsepower motor. The ranch is set out to vines, fruit trees, alfalfa and grain. Dairying is also coming in for attention.

About 500 horsepower is served to operate a chain of wells on the Wylie M. Giffen holding in the Arvin territory. The property comprises 1920 acres, and is one of the finest grape acreages in that part of the country.

Rice, alfalfa, and grain have been tried out with good results on the T. A. Tomasini holding of 3,000 acres, near Wasco. Future development of this property will take the form of crops best suited to soil and climatic conditions. Seven wells are operated, each pumped with a 20-horsepower motor.

Group development on a large scale is being carried on in certain sections of the county, particularly in the northwestern part, near Shafter, where the colonization idea is being encouraged by owners of large tracts. Groups of prospective settlers are secured in sufficient numbers to purchase a large acreage, varying from a section upward. The individual holdings of the members are apportioned to suit the individual. This method of development has met with considerable success, principally because it brings in people who are financially able to carry on the project, and gives the county a desirable class of citizens.

CITRUS FERTILIZERS TO BE GIVEN TESTS

Locations are now being sought by the farm adviser for Orange county for three permanent test plots on citrus fertilizers, to be carried on for a period of ten years.

One of the live questions of the citrus industry today is what form or forms of fertilizer will permanently maintain the fertility and productivity of the citrus grove.

The fertilizer committee of the farm bureau has given considerable thought and study to arranging a series of plots in Orange county which will give the desired information after a sufficient lapse of time.

After consulting with the specialists of the experiment station and college of agriculture, it is universally agreed that the promiscuous plot is of no value. Hundreds of short-time plots have been started, and most of them have been given up or discontinued before definite results were obtained.

The present plan of the farm bureau fertilizer committee, co-operating with the agricultural extension service, is to seek the co-operation of at least three ranchers to carry on a long-time project covering a minimum of ten years. It is hoped to locate one of these plots on each of the main soil types of Orange county.

There will be twenty plots of eight trees each, to be divided into four groups embracing various combinations of barnyard manure, nitrogen, phosphorous and potassium. Two groups will be crossed with cover crops, and two will get clean culture.

The application of fertilizers will be supervised by the farm adviser. Growers interested in this work are invited to confer with the farm adviser.

LOW-BUILT TRACTOR

A deep-digging tractor orchard cultivator that is built close to the ground has recently been developed by the International Harvester Company particularly for California orchardists. There are no upward projecting levers or other parts to interfere with low-hanging branches, the wheels being the highest parts of the machine and they being only twenty-five inches in diameter. The cultivator, it is stated, can be worked under low branches and close up to the trunks of the trees. The machine is known as the "P & O" orchard tractor cultivator. The crank handle projects downward out of the way and the whole crank acts as a fender.

During the year ending May 31, over 1,500,000 bales of cotton were stored in warehouses licensed under the United States Warehouse Act.

Announcing the "JUNIOR"
Now we can give you the Small Model

IT IS A REAL GARDEN CULTIVATOR

You can cultivate vegetables—garden truck—flowers—nursery stock in large hot houses or in the open.
You can cultivate one row at a time or two or three if your vegetables are seeded with a gang seeder.
You can go astride of the row if they are close together or between them, if they are sufficiently wide.
It's a Hand Wheel Garden Hoe that runs under its own power. All the backaching work of pushing the Hand Wheel Hoe is eliminated.
The little engine does all the work. You just steer it—and it's simple—you can learn how in a few minutes' practice. The clutch and throttle controls are right on the handles—you have no gears to shift—no levers to operate.

THE SUBURBANITE

Can raise a large garden and be independent of hired help.
He can cultivate nights and mornings and Saturday afternoons while he is resting.
One man with a One-Row Cultivator can do several times as much in a day as he can do with a Hand Wheel Hoe, and if his conditions are such that he can use a Two or Three Row Cultivator, he can do just that much more.
He can cultivate better than with a Hand Wheeled Hoe because he can set the gauge wheels to let the tools in the ground to an exact depth. The hard spots in the field can be cultivated to the same depth as the rest. A thing you can't and do not do with Hand Wheel Hoes.

A BEEMAN JR. IS CROP INSURANCE

Crops are often saved, made or materially increased by cultivating them at just the right time—after one rain and before another, etc.
By owning a Beeman, Jr., you can become independent of hired help. The work is so easy you can do it yourself, or you can let your boys or girls do it. They will enjoy it. There is no drudgery to it. They won't leave home because work is too hard.

Some Facts You Should Know

The Beeman Tractor Co. was the first concern in the world to develop and manufacture Garden Tractors and Power Cultivators.

We have been at it longer—7 years—have made more—had more experience in more sections of the world, under a greater variety of conditions, than any other manufacturer of Power Garden Cultivators.

Being the originators we secured very broad patents covering points absolutely essential to have on Power Garden Cultivators to enable them to do close work without cutting out the vegetables and to be simple and easy to operate.

The Beeman Jr. is new and up-to-date but is made by those who have had the real practical experience—you will not be buying an experiment.

Do not misjudge it by what you may know or have heard about so-called Garden Tractors made by those who have been trying to avoid or get around our patents.

If your dealer hasn't it write or call on us.

CARNATION PLANTS FOR WINTER BLOOM

These brilliantly colored, spicy-fragrant flowers are winter's standby. They bloom abundantly when other flowers are scarce. Germain-grown plants in red, white or pink, 75c doz. or $4 per 100.

What's more to be desired than an iris-bordered walk? The foliage is luxuriant and extremely artistic, the blooms are exquisite in form, color and fragrance. It is a hardy grower, thriving in sun or shade. It makes a permanent beauty spot as it multiplies with the passing years. By far the most beautiful of iris is Germain's Germanica—in mammoth purple, white or light blue at 50c doz. (Mailing 10c extra.)

SOME DONT'S AND DO'S FOR CANARY OWNERS

Don't wash perches—scrape them. Damp perches cause rheumatism.

Don't leave cage uncovered at night. Use light cloth in Summer and flannel cloth in Winter.

Don't feed lettuce. It contains opium and induces bowel trouble. Do feed dandelion or nasturtium leaves. Both contain iron and mineral salts.

Don't feed seed which contains hulled oats. It causes gout (leg trouble) and loss of song.

Do feed Spratt's Cod Liver Oil Food two or three times a week. It is very nourishing, aids digestion and furnishes oil necessary to beautiful sleek plumage. Package 15c; mailed 20c.

Do feed Germain's Roller Mixture—the perfect seed diet for all song birds. Package 20c; mailed 25c.

JOIN IN FIGHT TO EXTERMINATE ANTS

Ants are over-running the country. In fact, they have become so great a menace that Government chemists have prepared a special exterminator which everyone is urged to use. We have this "poison-syrup" in safe, refillable, patented jars at 50c each or 12 for $5. Positively stops the invasion. Ants carry it to their holes and entire colony is destroyed.

GOLDEN PRIVET, $2.50, VERY SHOWY SHRUB

On city lot or large estate the Golden Privet always finds a hearty welcome. It is as bright and cheerful as the California sunshine. Extra choice large balled specimens—2½ to 3 ft.—$2.50. (Sent express, charges collect.)

Eat more Onions

Onions should be a part of your daily diet. They are health-giving, appetizing and indispensable for flavoring. Start a patch with Germain's selected white silverskin sets, 30c lb. (Mailed 35c.)

FAIR TO BE LARGER THAN EXPECTED

RIVERSIDE.—Rapidly rounding into shape, the Southern California Fair which will open at Riverside, October 10, continuing for six days, promises to be larger than ever before. There was a time when the live-stock producers feared that a railroad strike was imminent and when they were doubtful about active participation, but now that danger of the strike is apparently past, assurances have been received by Secretary Van Pelt that a goodly number of big live-stock breeders of the South will be on hand at Riverside.

The exhibit of Brown Swiss cattle will be one of the features of the dairy show, where will be shown also fine collections of Holsteins, Guernseys, Jerseys and Ayrshires. Secretary Van Pelt declares that the Riverside show will be the largest in the matter of livestock, poultry, goats and from an agricultural standpoint of any show in the Southwest.

It is stated that the showing of pure bred milch goats will be the largest ever made anywhere. Eight counties join in making the agricultural show. Sixteen communities of Riverside county will have exhibits. The poultry show will be one of the largest ever held in the south. Boys' and girls' pig clubs, calf clubs, poultry clubs and agricultural clubs will compete for prizes.

The Riverside fair is known as the "farmer's fair," as every effort is made to create a show that will be full of interest for the grower. The large prize and award list, $50,000, is expected to put the Southern California fair more in the limelight than ever before.

Work of remodelling barns, grandstand and other buildings is completed and officials of the fair are able to house more live-stock and more exhibits than ever before. Last year many exhibits were turned away. It is hoped that such will not be the case this year with the added housing.

Garden Peas

up to two or three weeks before the heavy winter rains set on, and again in the early spring. The best planting time (if only one planting is to be made) will be the latter part of August and in September.

To plant the seed, make use of the hoe and the rake. With the hoe, make a flat bottomed furrow, four inches wide and two inches deep, by first scraping away the top dry soil to one side, and about an inch of the moist soil to the other. Scatter the seed along the bottom of this furrow, not too thick, but enough to insure a proper stand. Aim to cover them with an inch of moist soil and, after firming that, draw a half inch of the dry soil over all, as a mulch.

If the above instructions as to soil preparation are faithfully carried out, the planting will not need an irrigation until the seedlings are well above the surface of the soil. If not, then the planting is liable to be a failure, for the seed or the young plants should never be irrigated. The moisture that has been stored in the soil before planting should bring up the seed and must be conserved by constant cultivation. Irrigation, when once begun, should be applied in furrows, away from the plants. There is little need for supports for peas in California, for they will bear just about as heavily prostrate.

And now as to varieties. The Nott's Excelsior and the Dwarf Telephone are good early sorts for the home garden. For second early varieties, the Strategem and the Senator are planted. Late peas for the home garden should include the Prizetaker, for it is a large prolific sort.

Circular No. 227, from the State University, recommends the following methods of control for pests of the garden pea:

Pea Aphis: "This is a large green aphid attacking the terminal shoots and the leaves of the vines. It is difficult to control because of the expense involved, but can be killed by repeated applications of a ten per cent nicodust or nicotine spray, or a six per cent nicosulphur dust, which will also control the mildew." In home garden culture, repeated applications of nicotine sulphate dusts would seem to be the most practicable.

Mildew: "A powdery white growth which spreads over the foliage, injuring the plants. Troublesome in summer, or when rains are light or lacking. Dust with sulphur on first appearance, or with nicosulphur dust if aphids are abundant and repeat if necessary." These methods of control can be used in the home garden with good results.

Walnut Field Day

Walnut Growers' Association, and then followed with a discussion of new laws affecting the co-operative movement.

"The Necessity of Better Harvesting and Curing Methods" was discussed by H. C. Sharp, inspection department, California Walnut Growers' Association. Mr. Sharp emphasized the importance of obtaining high quality nuts. With high land values and high cost of production, he said, the California grower must meet competition from foreign countries with a higher class product. The American buyer, he declared, will pay for a high quality product, and indications are now for better nuts this season than last. Good harvesting methods must be used, however, he pointed out, and growers can do much toward seeing that their walnuts are properly cured.

During the noon hour, an old-fashioned barbecue was held in the grove. Santa Barbara walnut growers know how to feed a large crowd. Tables were set for 1000 persons. Instead of lining up for "eats," everyone sat at the tables, and Boy Scouts served the dinner. No one went away hungry, for there was more than plenty.

In the afternoon a field trip was made, and Prof. Ralph Smith of the College of Agriculture spoke on the subject, "Up-to-Date Information on Pest Control by Dusting," following his remarks with a field demonstration. He stated that more dusting than spraying had been done in recent years. Some poor results have been obtained, he said, but these have been mostly due to poor application. Dusting is not a cure-all, but it will control certain pests, such as aphis, spider, and codling moth, he declared.

Prof. Smith is the originator of nicodust material, and of dusting for walnut pests. He stated that investigations are under way for the mixing of the materials for [illegible] cost. He showed a machine which he had adjusted for doing this work, as well as for applying the dust. He stated that satisfactory results are being obtained, but that the duster will be improved for commercial use. The relative cost of material will be about one-half for the material mixed this way in comparison with what can be bought prepared, he stated.

A soil moisture demonstration was given by Prof. J. W. Nelson of the College of Agriculture, division of agricultural extension. Holes had been dug in two groves, side by side, in order to show the root development of trees which had never been irrigated and of others which were irrigatd during the past season. The unirrigated during the past season. The unwhile the irrigated trees had feeders in abundance. However, the unirrigated trees [illegible] downward, but [illegible] surface. Prof. Nelson discussed the moisture requirements of trees and the response of trees to various moisture conditions. He emphasized the importance of always having an adequate amount of moisture within the upper four to six feet, stating that even if there is plenty of moisture below, where there are deeper penetrating roots, those roots below will not meet the tree's needs. The upper roots are the most important for moisture and plant food supply. The greatest fertility is within the upper one and one-half feet of soil, so fibrous root development should be encouraged in that area, he said.

E. S. Kellogg, horticultural commissioner of Santa Barbara, showed the walnut growers some hybrids which were the results of crosses between the Eastern Black walnut and the Persian walnut. Enormous growth had been obtained in a short time. These trees are top-worked to Ehrhardt walnuts. About 10 per cent of trees from these crosses are of this type, and the remainder are Persian and black walnut types.

IS PRIZE WINNER

SAN BERNARDINO.—Hollow Hill milk from the ranch of George de Vries won second prize for quality milk at the California State Fair in Sacramento this year. The analysis gave him a rating of 982 points out of a possible 1000, a record excelled only by that of the Adohr Farm of Los Angeles, which made a rating of 988. The milk was judged according to its quality, low bacteria, flavor, lack of sediment and acidity. The Model Dairy of Redlands was awarded two second prizes for quality milk. Dairies from all districts of California entered the competition and the judges were experts of authority.

UNLOCK the rich treasures of your subsoil—the real "pay dirt" on your farm. Give the roots more room to grow; give the moisture greater storage space. Subsoiling with "Caterpillar" power is the way. One man writes: "30% increase in grape crop first year of subsoiling". Another says: "A short time after subsoiling my orange trees showed more new growth than preceding 2 years." Many other letters tell of bigger profits from subsoiling.

"Caterpillar" T35 Tractor is the one tractor small enough for all orchard and vineyard work and yet powerful enough to handle the heavy job of subsoiling. It is only 48 inches wide and 52 inches high but delivers 15 horsepower at the drawbar.

The versatility, economy and dependability of "Caterpillar" T35 Tractor are axioms among its many owners. Other sizes of "Caterpillar" Tractors—5-Ton, Western 10-Ton and the big "75" meet other, bigger power needs. Write at once for information about "Caterpillar" Tractors and subsoiling tools.

CITRUS INSTITUTE ATTENDANCE LARGE

BY MRS. ROBERT A. MACK.

LINDSAY.—The outstanding feature of the Central California Citrus Institute, held at Lindsay, September 6, was the concentrated interest and co-operative spirit of the 400 citrus men of the valley who were in attendance. Acute realization of the problems of citriculture and determination to better conditions for the future of the industry through one big unit, tnus benefiting individual exchanges and growers, seemed present in the minds of each attendant. The presence of women in the gathering showed that just as woman is taking her place in other realms of progress, so is she to be a factor in the citrus field.

June drop, treatment of scale, treatment of foncela, fertilization, influence of stock, irrigation and kindred other topics occupied the attention of the growers. Latest methods and discoveries were freely discussed by leading experts of the State and county.

W. B. Kiggens, vice-president of the Lindsay Chamber of Commerce, delivered the address of welcome. Other speakers and their subjects follow:

R. S. Woglum, entomologist for California Citrus Exchange, "The Need for Better Pest Control;" Frank Brann, Tulare county Horticultural Commissioner, "Practical Results in Control of Citricola Scale in Central California;" A. J. Flebut, entomologist Federal Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., "Control of Citrus Thrip;" Dr. P. A. Boncquet, Tulare county plant pathologist, "Progress Report on June Drop;" Gordon Surr, field assistant in orchard management citrus experiment station, Riverside, "Fertilization Problems of Citrus;" R. S. Vaile, assistant professor of orchard management citrus experiment station, "Irrigation Practices on Citrus Soils;" Grant Phillips, manager Venice Cove Ranch, "Fertilization and Cultural Practices on Venice Cove Ranch;" W. R. Schoonover, extension specialist in citriculture, University of California, "Cover Crops;" Dr. H. J. Webber, professor of subtropical horticulture and director of citrus experiment station, Riverside, "Influence of Stock on Growth of Trees;" C. W. Cleary, Tulare county Assemblyman, "The Farm Bureau and Citrus Grower;" H. C. Carr, First National Bank, Porterville, "The Banker;" W. E. Sprott, secretary-treasurer and manager Tulare County Fruit Exchange, Porterville, "The Market;" Frank Daybell, chairman citrus department, Tulare County Farm Bureau, "Citrus Department."

C. M. Conner, Tulare county farm adviser, acted as chairman of the meeting at the Arboretum and at the banquet held at the Hotel Lindsay in the evening.

A resolution was adopted urging the government to establish a citrus experiment station in Tulare county, similar to the one at Riverside, for the purpose of dealing with the problems in the San Joaquin Valley's citrus industry.

It was the concensus of opinion that the institution should become an annual event. The meeting at Lindsay marked the first occasion of the kind to be held north of Tehachapi and was indicative of the growing importance of the San Joaquin Valley in the citrus industry of the State.

The first annual Central California Citrus Institute was arranged through efforts of the citrus department of the Tulare County Farm Bureau, working in conjunction with similar departments in Fresno and Kern counties, and through co-operation and assistance of State, Federal and county officials.

GRAPE GROWERS ARE HIT BY CAR SHORTAGE

With the largest grape crop on record being harvested, grape growers of California, except the raisin producers, are hard hit by the shortage of rolling stock. It is estimated that forty-five per cent of the orders to date for fresh grapes from Eastern centers are unfilled because of this shortage.

Conservative estimates have placed the grape crop at 45,000 carloads, with at least 40,000 carloads to be moved during the months of September and October. The movement should be on an average of 700 carloads per day, but during early September, only forty-one carloads, on the average, were shipped per day. Growers are getting good prices for the grapes shipped, and the market is growing stronger.

Railroad officials state that they do not need an order from the Interstate Commerce Commission to get the refrigerator cars to California. They admit their best business at this time is in shipping fresh fruit from California eastward, and they are bending every effort to get the cars here. They say the trouble is east of the Mississippi, where many refrigerator cars are tied up on account of the strike.

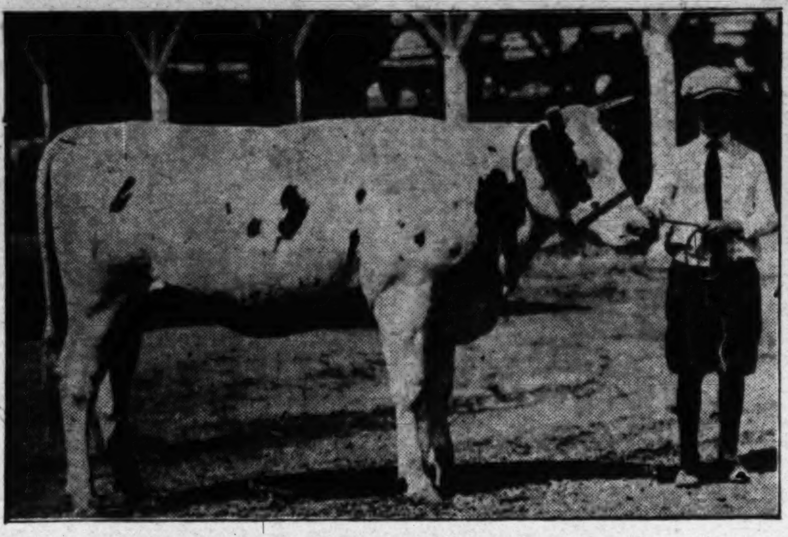
BY ROBERT T. LYANS.

RECENTLY completed records in the Los Angeles County Farm dairy herd include that of Henrietta Luecke Colantha, senior four-year-old, daughter of Beryl Luecke De Kol, who made 25.70 pounds of butter from 466.8 pounds of milk. She will be continued on yearly test and should make a good record, as, in two-year-old form after making 16.52 pounds of butter in seven days, she proved such a consistent producer that she made forty-one times as much in fifty-two weeks, or 675 pounds of butter. Concordia Segis Phoenix, at ten years of age, made 24.09 pounds of butter and 586.3 pounds of milk in seven days, later milking as high as 95 pounds of milk per day on semi-official test. In the long-time tests, De Kol Korndyke Alcartra Phoenix has completed, in 298 days, 804.3 pounds of butter from 20,778.6 pounds of milk, and will freshen well within the calving requirement of fourteen months. At the beginning of the period she milked as high as 103 pounds per day and 690 pounds in a week. Whittier Pontiac Netherland 4th, the 1139-pound, state champion four-year-old, has freshened again with a beautiful heifer calf, sired by King Korndyke Pontiac Mead. This calf traces three times to the famous foundation matron, De Kol of Valley Mead, through both sire and dam. The descent from De Kol of Valley Mead is through an 1100-pound, three-year-old and an 1100-pound four-year-old, and twice through the thousand-pound four-year-old, De Kol of Valley Mead 2, all of these cows having held State or world records.

The Fred Hartsook Ranch herd of Holstein cattle, at the Tulare County Fair at Tulare, September 10-19, succeeded in again capturing grand champion honors with the aged cow, Ava Model Hengerveld 2d. The senior champion bull at Stockton and Sacramento Major Korndyke Pontiac Forbes again took this honor at Tulare. Other winnings made by Hartsook Ranch were first prize junior yearling bull, Panzie Tritomia Ormsby; first prize senior bull calf, Meadhart Aaggie Mead Lad, first prize junior bull calf, Meadhart Aaggie Meade Ormsby, first aged cow. Ava Model Hengerveld 2d., first three-year-old cow, Jessie Forbes Snowball, first junior yearling heifer, Caroline Wayne Fayne, first junior heifer calf and junior champion female, Meadhart Eva Rona, besides many seconds and thirds. The Berylwood Stock Farm, Hueneme, Ventura County, took first first and second in the senior heifer class, and second in the senior heifer calf class, besides taking first on senior yearling bull, this latter being won by Prince Aaggie of Berylwood, who was later named grand champion bull. He had previously taken the same major award at Stockton and Sacramento. H. G. Ball of Tulare, took first prize in the two-year-old bull class, Sargent Bros, Tulare won first in the senior yearling heifer class, and P. M. Longau of Tulare captured first place in the two-year-old heifer class, second place in this event going to W. J. Higdon of Tulare.

The general condition and tone of the eastern market is good, according to the California Cattlemen's association the second week in September. The San Francisco market remains strong, with a very good demand for choice cattle weighing 1150 to 1200 pounds. The bulk of sales in the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valley counties average from 6½ to 6¾ f. o. b. ranch for steers, with sales of top steers at 7 cents. Cows continue to sell at 5¼ to 5½ f.o.b. ranch for choice quality, with 5 cents to 5¼ for the bulk of sales. The Los Angeles market is reported to be rather quiet, but with good demand for choice cattle. Sales are reported at an average of 6½ to 6¾ in the country for steers, and 5 cents to 5½ for cows, and feeder cattle are reported sold in Kern County for 5¾ f. o. b. ranch for better grade of feeders and 5½ cents for fairly good feeders. Cows are reported sold at 5 cents f.o.b. ranch. The usual fall demand for feeder steers is now quite pronounced and numerous inquiries for thin stock have been made by Imperial Valley feeders and from sugar beet localities. Due to abundance of relatively cheap feed in the feeding districts of California, the market for thin cattle has a healthy appearance in spite of the apparently large supply soon to be available.



A Proud Young Southern California Stock Breeder.

Baird Snodgrass, Hueneme lad, holding Pearl Aaggie Hengerveld, his champion Holstein heifer in Boys' and Girls' Calf Club section of State Fair.

The Diamond Bar Ranch sale of registered Hereford cattle at Spadra on September 26 will include nineteen females and twenty-six bulls; There will be eight cows with calves at foot. Practically all of the females are sired by Beau Tempter, Bourbon Columbus, and Prince Carlos 10. The range-raised bulls include sons of Beau Blanchard, Don perfect, Prince Carlos, Beau Lamplighter, Grove Dale and other white-face sires of equal prominence. The sale will be conducted by the California Breeders Sales and Pedigree Company and Rhodes and Rhodes will do the selling.

Employees of the Adohr Stock Farms recently enjoyed a barbecue in Cahuenga Canyon. The workers attended in force with their families or sweethearts. The men who deliver the Adohr milk were given an opportunity to fully inspect the big Adohr plant during the day and see for themselves how the product was turned out. The entire Milk Commission of Los Angeles was there, as well as many of the heads of large dairies in the country. W. H. Jackson, of the Santa Monica Dairy, had his famous dairy band at the feast. All the employees had a good time, and the affair, planned and executed by M. H. Adamson, owner of the Farms, was a great success.

The San Bernardino County Cow Testing Association has been reorganized on a good basis, and A. M. Whitney selected as tester.

Due to an increased demand for baby chicks, B. R. Holloway, owner of Holly Poultry Ranch, Van Nuys, reports that he is increasing the size of his already large hatchery by adding a new double wall, especially ventilated room, size 60 feet by 125 feet inside. When this is completed it will bring the total floor space up to 18,000 square feet. Up to September 7th, the Holly Hatchery had delivered over 58,000 fall hatched baby chicks, an increase of forty per cent over last year at this date, which would seem to indicate that fall hatched chicks are becoming more popular each season.

The Leon F. Douglass sale of Milking Shorthorn cattle, which will take place Tuesday, September 26th, on the Felt farm, six miles west of Palo Alto, will find many good animals being offered. 19 FEMALES—26 BULLS

This complete dispersal of well selected Herefords will afford buyers an opportunity to secure breeding females of substantial worth, and an unusually good selection of bulls for range service.

THE FEMALES

The 19 females include eight cows with calves at foot. Not a female in the sale over six years old. They are practically all sired by Beau Tempter, Bourbon Columbus and Prince Carlos 10th. A real opportunity to buy good females in a year when few are offered for sale in this State.

THE BULLS

The 26 bulls are an attractively bred lot of individuals, all ready for heavy service. They include sons of such famous bulls as Beau Blanchard, Don Perfect, Prince Carlos, Cuba's Panama, Beau Lamplighter, Grove Dale, Beau Mischief 40th, and Donald Lad 15th.

These cattle are range raised, used to rustling for themselves, and will be presented in good breeding condition.

WALNUT GROWERS ARE URGED TO PRODUCE HIGHER QUALITY NUTS

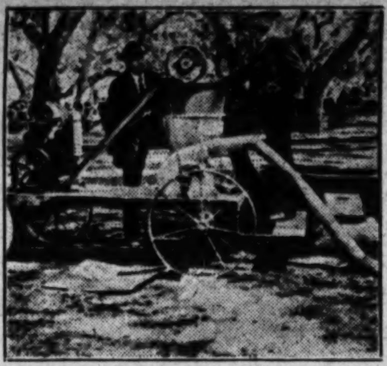
THE second annual Walnut Growers' Field Day, held September 2, under the auspices of the walnut growers' departments of the farm bureaus of Orange, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles counties at Santa Barbara in Tucker's Grove, near Goleta, attracted over 850 persons. Growers were present from every walnut district of California.

The walnut growers' department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau was organized over a year ago. Other counties saw the possibilities of such an organization, and the Orange and Santa Barbara county farm bureaus formed their walnut growers' departments. With the organization of growers of other counties to rotate the field day in the various interested counties. The Santa Barbara walnut growers staged this year's Field Day.

The morning session was held at Tucker's Grove, where the growers were comfortably seated under the beautiful live oak trees. The meeting was presided over by George M. Williams, president of the Santa Barbara County Walnut Growers' Association. E. W. Stow of Goleta delivered the address of welcome.

The subject, "Walnut Growers' Departments, Their Growth and Accomplishments," was presented by Robert W. Hodgson, farm adviser for Los Angeles county. Mr. Hodgson introduced his subject with a brief discussion of the agricultural extension service and its field of work. He told of the programs which were laid out by the walnut growers' department of Los Angeles county for the years 1921 and 1922. In 1921, a field day was held, with an attendance of over 1200. An effort was made last year to obtain an investigation of walnut foot rot disease, and this was undertaken by the experiment station at Riverside. Steps also were taken to obtain an extension specialist in walnut culture, and the university has a sympathetic attitude toward this project. The program for 1922 has been about 75 per cent completed. The desirability for a large number of members headed the list, and 730 walnut growers were signed. The annual institute was held in January, an extension specialist has been secured, foot rot and field curing investigations are under way, fertilizer plots have been established, field demonstrations for treatment of diseases have been held, as well as top-grafting demonstrations. Cost of production data will be obtained.

"The 1922 Season's Outlook" was discussed by W. T. Webber, sales manager, California Walnut Growers' Association. Mr. Webber stated that there is an unusually large crop, there being about 30,000 tons where there were 20,000 last season. Prospects for good quality were excellent all around until the hot weather came, he said, the hot weather having affected about 2 or 3 per cent of the trees.



An Interesting Exhibit.

Prof. Ralph Smith (right) demonstrating mixing of grove dusting materials by means of dusting machine adjustment.

The crops in foreign countries are also good, and will be a serious competition with our nuts, he stated. Crops in China, France, the Balkan states, and in Turkey are large. The latter two are selling their walnuts as French nuts. All are improving in quality and grade to meet the American competition.

Mr. Webber emphasized the importance of growers doing everything possible to improve the standard of their output in order to meet this competition. He stated that the tariff bill has been passed on by both houses, but has not yet become a law. The Senate has met the demands of the growers, but the House of Representatives has passed a lower tariff.

EFFECT OF THE STRIKE

If the railroad strike were called off immediately, it would still affect the delivery of nuts, he said. In case there is a general tie-up, the association has made arrangements for steamship transportation. But even that might be unsatisfactory, Mr. Webber pointed out, for the nuts might become tied up at the steamship terminal. In general, the outlook is rather uncertain, and prices must be lower than they were last year, it was brought out.

Mr. Webber also spoke of the campaign being conducted by the association to encourage growers to eliminate trees when they are too dense. Crops can be greatly increased by so doing, he said.

George E. Farrand, attorney for the California Walnut Growers' Association and member of the agricultural legislative committee, spoke on "New Developments in the Co-operative Movement." Mr. Farrand traced the history of the California

WEATHER CONDITIONS FAVOR CROP GROWTH

Although the extremely warm weathe in August damaged beans and sunburne some walnuts, weather conditions generall were favorable for crops throughout Cal fornia during that month, stated E. Kaufman, State Agricultural Statistician, his latest report.

The condition of corn is 91 per cen of normal, barley shows 96 per cent of normal crop, rice shows great improve ment and the condition of the potato cro in Central California, the crop having bee harvested in Southern California, is 9 per cent of normal, the estimated produ tion being 11,379,000 bushels.

Grain sorghums show 92 per cent of normal crop, cotton looks like a 91 pe cent crop, and the forecast is for a produ tion of 130,000 bales. Sugar beets decline one point during the month, the conditio now being 87 per cent of normal. Bean did not set well during the warm weathe of August. The condition of this crop d clined two or three points, and is now 8 per cent of normal.

Of the fruit crops that are yet to b harvested, apples show a condition of 8 per cent and a production of 7,766,00 boxes, an increase of a little over a millio boxes. The condition of figs is 89 per cen of normal, of pears 83 per cent, olives 4 per cent, and grapes 99 per cent.

Forecast of production of some fruit an nut crops follow:

Walnuts, 29,000 tons; almonds, 9,00 tons; prunes, 100,000 tons; pears, 100,00 tons; peaches 420,000 tons; plums, 47,00 tons.

LIVE STOCK IS POPULAR

That animal husbandry is developin with remarkable rapidity in California i demonstrated by the following interestin figures showing the estimated number an value of animals on farms:

Live Stock	Number	Value

Washable Kitchen Walls

The first consideration in the modern kitchen is cleanliness. But this by no means diminishes the opportunity for attractive decorations. For example, your washable woodwork may be of a cheerful light gray to harmonize with a correspondingly light tan on the walls and ceiling. Liveliness can be given by brightly colored curtains.

HORSE SHOW TO BE A FAIR FEATURE

POMONA.—A special feature of the Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona, October 17-21, will be the Horse Show, in which some of the finest entries in Southern California will be exhibited four nights, starting Wednesday, October 18. Many of the most notable strings of blooded equine beauties are expected from Santa Barbara, Montecito, Chino, Pasadena, Beverly Hills and Hollywood. Tom Managan has been appointed as manager of the show, and among those co-operating will be such well known experts as Revel Lindsay English, Ed Hanlon and L. S. Rawlins.

The committee of Pomona men in charge of the fair is already supervising constructive work at the site of forty acres adjacent to Ganesha Park. The grounds have been purchased by the city with the idea of erecting permanent fair buildings, which are now under way. A special tent of unusually large dimensions will house some of the live-stock exhibits, and every preparation is being made for the entertainment and comfort of those who will visit the grounds during the week.

It is expected that the attendance will be large and that the Horse Show and races will draw crowds of enthusiasts. A grandstand that will accomodate several thousand spectators is now under construction, and the track will be put in excellent condition. The various classes of horses to be shown are already planned for each exhibition night, and the roster is complete from the stock horse class to the five-gaited saddle mounts. Especial interest will be provided in the polo classes, high jumpers, and lady's hunters.

Thousands of dollars in prizes are to be awarded to the winning entries, a special appropriation having been made for this feature in addition to the premiums for live-stock exhibits. Several of the most noted judges of thoroughbreds are to be named for the Horse Show, it is said. W. S. Newton of Pomona will be in charge of the races, and a special thrill will be provided in the chariot racing, which will be a feature each afternoon. Ed Lovengood, who will be remembered as a famous yearly participant in the chariot races in the Tournament of Roses, has consented to take charge of this spectacle at the Pomona Fair, and he promises some real excitement in the daily contests. All of the race horses will be taken care of in stables on the grounds, built for that purpose and measuring 400 feet in length.

BUSY SEASON ENDS IN DRYING YARDS

BRYN MAWR.—L. O. Yount, who has one of the largest drying yards in this section, is preparing to close it down after one of the heaviest seasons in the history of the yard. Mr. Yount says that he has had more people working and a larger pay roll than ever before. He had planned to take care of about 200 or 300 tons of apricots, but when the canneries refused to accept a large part of the crop because of small sizes he jumped in and dried over 800 tons of green apricots in the yard, the largest run ever attempted there. He had over 500 persons employed most of the season.

Then he started in to help drying the peaches, the railroad strike interfering with shipments, and he has handled about 500 tons of this fruit, getting about twenty tons of the dried fruit. Most of the peaches came from the Greenspot. The total shipments by rail were only about forty cars when it was expected that sixty would be shipped. The fruit dried will bring very near as good a price as that which was sold in the Middle West, it is expected.

Mr. Yount is now closing his yard, cleaning up the trays and getting everything ship-shape for storing until the next season.

There is a strong demand for heavy cattle on the Los Angeles market.

SPLIT ON POLICY OF AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL

Less than twenty persons attended the hearings held in the State Railroad Commission's rooms in Los Angeles September 16, to determine the wants of the people of Southern California regarding the expansion needs of the College of Agriculture, University of California, and those who did attend were wide apart in their opinions as to what was wanted in the way of a branch of the College of Agriculture in Southern California. Most of the hearing was taken up with a heated discussion of whether any branch of the College established in Southern California should teach "dirt farming" or theoretical farming.

The few who did attend were considerably enlightened by the finding to date of the Commission on Agricultural Education, appointed by the last legislature, to study the needs of the State as a whole along this line, and to hold hearings to determine the attitude of the people regarding this question. The members of this commission who held the hearing were A. C. Hardeson, Santa Paula, S. G. Mortland, Fresno, J. J. Hollister, Gaviota, Robert G. Sproul, Berkeley, and R. A. Wilson, Sacramento. These men, with Dr. Ellwood Mead and W. G. Guilford, have recently returned from a trip to the principal colleges featuring agricultural education. They find that the University of California's agricultural branch, the College of Agricultural is behind Cornell, Michigan, Purdue, Ames, and other colleges in the matter of buildings, land and equipment, but that the personnel of the teaching force in this State, and the limited subject matter presented compare favorably with those of any agricultural school Chairman Hardeson was more outspoken. He said, "They are trying to teach agriculture in a flower pot at Berkeley, and at Davis there is land but no other facilities, but the reputation of the College of Agriculture is greater out of the State than it is winthin the borders of California.

There were several graduates of the University of California present, and it was the opinion of some of these college men that a school of sub-tropical agriculture should be established in the South, while others said there was no need for a school of practical agriculture in Southern California, as the Chaffee Junior College and the Smith-Hughes Act course filled the bill in this part of the State.

Mrs. S. U. Stewart, of San Bernardino, who urged a farm school on the site bought by the State at Riverside, and Delbert Utter, of Long Beach, took exception to the views of the college men, Mrs. Stewart insisting that the farmers wanted a school where their sons could learn "dirt farming" and not "book farming." Mr. Utter stated that the students should first acquire the principles of agriculture in the field, and that this should be a prerequisite of all agricultural training.

The hearings will be concluded with a meeting at San Luis Obispo, and a report will be made to the Governor. It was made plain by the Chairman that the hearings had nothing to do with the question of where branches of the College of Agriculture or other schools of agriculture were to be located.

It requires approximately 6,750,000 tons of chemicals to supply the annual demand for fertilizer in the United States, which consists mostly of cottonseed meal, packing house tankage, fish scrap, blood meal and lesser tonnage of garbage tankage, processed leather and other waste products.

of the breed at the Panama Pacific Exposition, and now eight years old, will be among the offering, as will also three of her daughters. There are seven young bulls by Foothill's Pioneer, one of the good bulls of the breed. Foothill's Pioneer was bred by May and Otis, Willoughby, Ohio, and was sired by General Clay, with thirty-two daughters averaging 9149 pounds of milk in a year. He is out of Imp. Tassel with a record of 7524 pounds of milk in a year with first calf. The cattle to be sold are said to be in good breeding condition and should render a good account of themselves in the future. C. R. Thomas, sales manager of Pacific Pure-bred Sales Company, will manage the sale.

EARLY APPLES ARE OF GOOD QUALITY

YUCAIPA.—The harvest of the apples in Yucaipa has begun, the harvest of Winter Bananas and King Davids now being on. The making of cider and vinegar is under way, recent heavy winds having caused windfalls which can be used to advantage. Drying and evaporating has also been started and from now until well in November there will be great activity in handling the big crop and the by-products.

The early varieties are not many and the crop from them will not be large, but it will be sufficient to keep the packing-houses going until the Delicious, one of the heavy plantings of the valley, gets under way. Everything is in shape now for the handling of the crop, the packing-houses being in good shape, with all available shook made into boxes for packing the fruit. The early varieties now being picked are of excellent quality and it is believed that the whole crop this year will be of fine quality and flavor, the trees being sturdier and hardier because of the cold weather last winter. There will be no loss this year, as the dehydrating plants and the big new vinegar factory at Redlands will be able to take care of all the cull fruit.

FIGHTING RODENT PESTS

VISALIA. — Horticultural Commissioner Frank R. Brann, in a monthly report of rodent control work in Tulare county for the month of August, states that 88,740 acres were inspected for squirrel infestation, of which 30,484 acres were found to be infested. The county treated 923 acres, while ranch owners throughout the county treated 67,750 acres during the same period.

There is danger of frost catching any plantings of cucurbits after September 1.

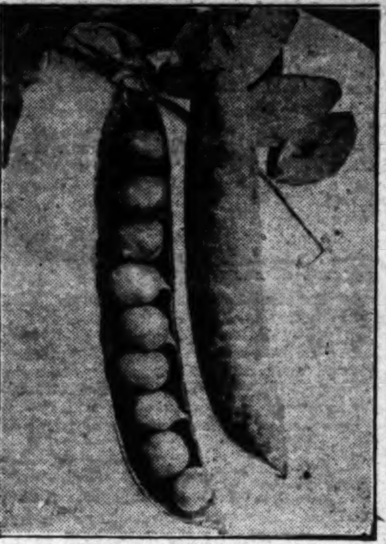
SEED BED FOR GARDEN PEAS MUST BE MOIST

By ROSS H. GAST

The pea is one of the most delicious as well as the most wholesome of all green vegetables, and, being a legume, its culture improves the soil in which the crop is planted. The home garden varieties will be a valuable adjunct to the kitchen, and green peas with new potatoes next spring can be anticipated by all who plant them this winter. Though classed as a winter vegetable in California, peas can be planted any time of the year except during the hot dry months of summer.

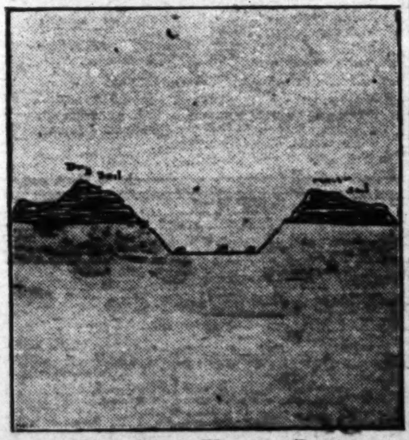


Dwarf Telephone Pea.

Any type of soil that is sufficiently rich to mature a crop, will meet the requirements of the garden pea. Heavy soils should be well drained to avoid seed rot, a common trouble in planting peas. Yet the moisture content of the lighter soils should be kept up at all times. In the winter, the rains will attend to that. Stable manure should not be used to improve the soil for them, as the heat is detrimental. Other animal manures can be used instead.

To grow this vegetable to perfection, so that they will yield an abundance of pods of good flavor, extra care must be taken in preparing the soil. Though the should be remembered that nothing is pea will stand a great deal of frost, it gained by planting the seed in cold, wet soil.

In the fall, after the long, hot months, flood the plot to be planted, using checks and allowing the water to soak in to a depth of twelve or fourteen inches. When making up these checks, use the garden hose, drawing up the soil in ridges, then cross these ridges with others. The borders thus made should be four or five inches high, and strong enough to hold water.



Furrow for Planting Peas.

This is a cross section of the flat-bottom furrow used for this crop. It should be two inches deep and four inches wide. If the moist soil is piled separately and later pressed directly over the seed, a uniform germination is assured. Many vegetable seeds can be planted in this type of furrow.

A few days after soaking, when the soil is in good condition, spade it up deep, and leave a good mulch on top. Do not plant for six or seven days after this preparation has been made, but allow the soil to mellow, and the moisture to permeate the soil thoroughly.

In the spring there is usually enough moisture in the soil, and the bed will not need irrigating. The winter rains will take care of that. It is only necessary to spade up the plot, and plant the seed.

Successive plantings of peas can be made

HIGH SCHOOL BOY IS REAL FARMER

By F. H. ERNST

Josh Wilson, a Pasadena high school boy, and a lover of animals, has demonstrated what can be done in the way of farming in a city.

In October, 1918, Josh purchased a Hampshire gilt for $25 from the Pasadena Red Cross. This represented his first experience with pigs. He bred the animal to a Poland China boar and obtained seven pigs. The cost of feeding was cut down by feeding broken and waste cookies from biscuit companies. The pigs also had access to acorns. At the age of six weeks these little pigs were sold for a total of $61.

He Favors the "Heavies."

Josh Wilson, Pasadena, High School boy, who is making a success as a stock and poultry breeder, and one of his Brahmas.

With his $61, Josh went to an auction sale of pure bred Hampshire hogs at the Ortega-Underhill Rancho, near Santa Barbara. This sale was held on August 6, 1919. Here he purchased a bred gilt of excellent breeding for sixty dollars. In addition, he received another bred gilt from C. E. Stone, secretary of the Hampshire Association, with the understanding that when she farrowed one-half of the pigs would be Mr. Stone's or, if Josh preferred, he could pay $65 cash for her. Returning to Pasadena the next day, Josh received a telegram from Mr. Underhill stating that they had just shipped him the two gilts and also a young boar. This was indeed a surprise as nothing had been said about a boar before. A letter arrived the next day explaining why they had sent him a boar. They frankly admitted having watched him and said they believed one so much interested in hogs should be given a good start.

He now had a sow, two gilts and a boar. The sow farrowed nine pigs, which sold for ninety dollars. The gilt actually purchased at Santa Barbara farrowed ten pigs. The gilts sold for $25 each and $85 was received for the five boars. This gave him a total of $210. The gilt purchased by Mr. Stone farrowed a litter of seven pigs, which sold for $100. After paying Mr. Stone for the gilt, he still had her left and $10 extra.

Josh now had $222 in cash as a result of his work with the pigs. He went to a pure bred Holstein sale and bought a heifer for $205. This heifer's mother, Candida, had milked eighty pounds of milk daily at fifteen years of age. She also had a twenty-pound butterfat record at the age of eleven. Owning two grade cows and two calves, but deciding to own nothing but purebreds, Josh sold the two calves for $45. He offered the owner of Candida the two grade cows and $55, which offer was accepted.

This old cow was due to calf in about two months' time so she was fed rolled oats and an abundance of hay to get her into the best possible condition. She had been bred to a thirty-six pound bull of very excellent breeding. A bull calf was born which was taken away from the cow on the second day. On the first day of milking Candida gave fifty-five pounds of milk and at the end of fourteen days she gave seventy pounds of milk daily. She was milked three times daily and at the end of twenty-four days was giving ninety pounds of milk. She was now put on test in a box stall about twelve feet square where she remained during the duration of the test. During these seven days, on strictly official test, the cow produced 604.3 pounds of milk and 23.3 pounds of butter fat. Word was received from the editor of the Holstein World that this was a new world's record for a cow at the age of sixteen.

Shortly after this, Josh attended a Holstein sale at the Anokia Stock Farm at Santa Anita. Here he purchased a two-year-old heifer, sired by a thirty-six pound bull, was bred to King Korndyke Pontiac Acme, $41,000 bull owned by the Anita Baldwin ranch. This heifer was entered in the Los Angeles County Holstein heifer contest. The heifer freshened and for 131 days has produced an average of 32.1 pounds of milk. The record for this project alone shows a net profit of $274.62 to Josh's credit.

In addition to his work with pigs and pure bred Holsteins, Josh also has a pen full of Brahma chickens, the males being caponized and raised for the Christmas market. All of his work is done during spare hours, for Josh works in a grocery on Saturdays and attends school on the other days of the week.

PIMA COTTON GINS AGAIN IN ACTION

PHOENIZ, ARIZ.—Several of the Pima cotton gins of the Salt River Valley are in operation, though seed cotton will not be in large supply for a week or more to come. From former crops remain about 15,000 bales, two-thirds held in New England warehouses, this supply to be compared with 100,000 bales held a year ago. The valley is rather over-supplied with ginning facilities, with equipment based on the peak crop of 180,000 acres, two years ago. This year's crop will be from about 80,000 acres. The yield per acre has been bettering steadily, as knowledge has been acquired by the average farmer of proper cultivation methods and as there has been elimination of land unsuited to the crop. A saving of twenty-five per cent on transportation expense is expected through operation of a large cotton compress now nearing completion in the southeastern part of Phoenix. Picking will cost only 2 cents a pound, compared with the peak of five cents.

A few thousand acres of Durango cotton will be ginned in a plant nearly completed south of Phoenix. The staple will be kept absolutely separate from the Pima product. It is possible that this gin will be called upon to handle about 600 acres of short-staple that has been grown around Casa Grande. This year most of the Yuma cotton is short-staple.

During the fall is an ideal time for starting a lawn.

SANTA CRUZ HAS A 300-EGG LEGHORN

SANTA CRUZ.—Alex Wilson's White Leghorn hen, No. 38, dropped her 300th egg during August, the eleventh month of the California Farm Bureau Egg-Laying Contest here, and bids fair to break the world's record for egg production. If she keeps up production for September at the rate she did for August—28 eggs—she will go under the wire a winner.

Five hens laid twenty-eight eggs in August in the contest, including another of Mr. Wilson's hens.

The eleventh month closed with an average production of 57.2 per cent, or an average of eighteen eggs per hen for the entire period of the contest. This means that the average production of the contest flock is going to be close to 55 per cent, or well toward 200 eggs per hen.

The feed consumption amounted to 3.07 pounds of grain and 3.07 pounds of mash per bird. The total cost of the grain and mash for the month was 13 cents per bird.

A heifer gets a new set of teeth every nine months, counting from the time she is a year and a half old.

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

VAN NUYS.—B. H. Holloway has been forced to add more room to his already large hatchery at Van Nuys, a plant which has previously had a capacity of two hundred thousand eggs. He is now in the process of adding a new double wall and an especially ventilated room, 60x125 feet in size. When this is completed it will bring the floor space of the hatchery to eighteen thousand square feet. Up to a short time ago, Mr. Holloway had delivered 60,000 chicks for this fall's hatching, which is a forty per cent increase over his business at this time last year. He says the demand for chicks is good and that it is steadily growing, thus indicating an increasing interest in poultry in this section of the State, although Mr. Holloway ships to points far outside of Southern California.

FINE STOCK ENTERED

FRESNO.—Live-stock fanciers who attend the Fresno Fair, September 25 to 30, will have an opportunity of viewing one of the largest herds of Berkshire hogs and one of the finest aggregations of Guernsey cattle in the State as a result of the entering of the prize winning stock of A. B. Humphrey, a prominent breeder of Escalon. The herd consists of half a hundred head and was shown at both the San Joaquin Fair and the State Fair. Visitors to the fair will also see the famous herd of Fred Hartsook of Lankershim, and fine animals from the University Farm herds at Davis. Fred Gatewood, who will have charge of the live-stock entries, attended the State Fair where his famous Poland China boar was named a grand champion and where he obtained many good entries of live-stock for the Fresno Fair. Mr. Gatewood's prize herd of Poland Chinas will be seen here.

MUST SEW SACKS

ANAHEIM.—Walnut pickers in Anaheim will receive 75 cents per full sack this year, according to J. J. Dwyer, vice-president of the Anaheim Walnut Growers' Association, but the owner will be required to sew the sack. In other localities they will pay 65 cents per sack. The walnut crop will not be as large as was expected earlier in the season, owing to a combination of things, Mr. Dwyer states.

TO WAR ON VINES

REDLANDS.—Plans are being matured by Walter B. Hadley, deputy county horticultural commissioner, for a grand drive against the puncture vine. It is said that the vine has in the past year secured a big start along the roads and ranches, and the farmers, who all have cars, are anxious to get rid of this pest. The puncture vine fills a tire with sharp needles that do not puncture at the time of entering but which work through the casing until finally they put a hole in the inner tube. This is the time of seeding and Mr. Hadley says more can be done to get rid of the vines here than at any other season. The plan is to hoe up the vines all along the roadside and other places where they are found and pile them in great piles. These will be fired and in that way the seed will be destroyed. Mr. Hadley says that after this has been done two or three years the puncture vine can practically be eradicated.

WINS THREE CUPS

BURBANK.—Three silver cups is the record for E. L. White of the White Dairy ranch, as winner of prizes this year and last year in the Los Angeles county cow-testing contest. Last year Mr. White won a cup, the first prize in herd average for herds of over sixty head. That is in his possession, and soon he will have two more. One of them will be the first prize in herd average for a herd over sixty head and the other will be for the five highest cows in a herd of over sixty head. Mr. White is now busy erecting a 50x60 galvanized building which will house his trucks and trailers.

RAISES GLOBE ARTICHOKES

SAWTELLE. George C. Thomas, of the Ednado Ranch, near this place, specializes in Globe artichokes, which find a ready market at good prices. He has over 1,000 plants, each of which produced from ten to twenty artichokes this year. They require large quantities of water, but little cultivation. The Ednado Ranch vegetables and fruit trees are irrigated from two large reservoirs having a storage capacity of 800,000 gallons. These reservoirs are stocked with rainbow trout. Among the fruits grown are Mexican, Ceylon, Queen, Pueblo and Fuerta avocadoes, Chinese saucer peaches, bananas, Blood oranges. Golden Buckeye oranges, Pomegranates, cherimoyas, Kai apples, persimmons and mulberries. There are 800 avocado trees and 1000 persimmon trees on the place.

SELLS WHITEFACE BULLS

TULARE.—A sale of unusual interest to stock owners of this vicinity is that reported by the Green Cattle Company, which recently sold one carload of purebred Hereford bulls to Page & Missenheimer of Wilcox, Ariz. All of the animals were tuberculin tested, the work having been done by Dr. Outhier, deputy State veterinarian.

RODENTS EXTERMINATED

PHOENIX, ARIZ.—Within the Biological Survey there is claim that the last prairie dog has been killed within the counties of Cochise and Graham, this after three years of unremitting effort of 800 farmers and stockmen, directed by experts. It is estimated that the slaughter must have included 5,000,000 of the rodents and that it has resulted in an increase of forage that will permit the running of at least 50,000 head of sheep, as well as the farming of large tracts that once were dog villages. Prairie dogs were unknown in central or southern Arizona less than forty years ago, advancing year by year from Colorado or New Mexico till even the dry plains of the north had been occupied. The advance appeared to stop a little west of Prescott and to have extended little south of that point. Beyond, both west and south, are plains too dry for even rodents that have been found in great groups many miles from living water. In the north the warfare is being kept up.

HAS PRIZE PEACHES

SAN BERNARDINO.—Evidence as to the quality of peaches grown in San Bernardino county is furnished by R. B. Peters, president of the Farm Bureau, who owns a large fruit ranch at Devore. The Riverside Cannery was unable to supply its demand for fancy packs until it heard of the premium Lovell peaches grown in Mr. Peters's orchard. Mr. Peters had planned to dry practically his entire crop, but stated that the cannery offer had been so good that he was induced to change his plans. Mr. Peters has thirteen acres of peaches which will produce more than seventy-five tons of fruit this year.

WOULD STAMP FRUIT

SANTA ANA.—The names of Orange county towns on the breakfast tables of the nation—that is the vision of the orange packers in this section. F. J. Sevigne of Florida is the inventor of a machine that stamps the name of the town, the trademark and the packing-house on the fruit. The California Fruit Growers' Exchange is conducting tests of its practicability.

LIME-SULPHUR PLANTS

LINDSAY.—The second lime-sulphur manufacturing plant in Tulare county has been started here under the direction of the Farm Bureau. Manufacturing of lime-sulphur spray is expected to begin shortly. The Terra Bella plant is now operating successfully under the local unit plan. Plans are in progress for organization of similar units in Dinuba and Lemon Cove. Exeter growers are said to be considering a like step.

ORANGE COUNTY FAIR TO OPEN THIS WEEK

SANTA ANA.—Next Wednesday, September 27, is the opening date of the sixth annual Orange County Fair, which will this year be held in Santa Ana, the county seat and most centrally located of Orange county's cities. This year's fair, aver its officials and boosters, will be the biggest event of its kind in the history of Orange county, and there appears every reason to believe it will set a new mark in the quality of displays, departments represented, and general attractive features.

The seven tents housing the show have been up for several days, and for a week carpenters, electricians, booth builders and exhibitors have turned the vacant Union Pacific right of way north of East Fourth street for several blocks into a beehive of industry. The interiors of the "tops" are fast taking on a gala appearance, which will be increased during the few remaining hours until the fair opens.

The two main exhibition tents will house farm bureau and general exhibits, with industrial booths about the sides and in the center of one will be the entertainment platform. Five other tents will house the automobile show, tractors and implements, poultry, live stock and the baby welfare conference. Within the enclosure and near the live-stock tent will be a show ring, where stock may be exhibited in the open and where the horse show and rodeo will be held Friday night. To the front of the grounds on East Fifth street will be the amusement zone, which is in entire charge of the American Legion and which was early filled with amusement and refreshment concessions.

The fair will be officially opened Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with President D. Eyman Huff presiding, and opening welcome remarks will be made by Mayor J. G. Mitchell of Santa Ana and T. B. Talbert, chairman of the Board of Supervisors. This is Santa Monica Bay district day, and the Santa Monica Marine Band will play afternoon and evening. It will be accompanied here by a large delegation. Wednesday night is motion-picture stars' night, and famous stars will act as judges in the beauty contest, in which fifty or more of Orange county's prettiest girls have been entered.

Thursday is the Mexican people's day, in honor of their early settlement and widespread activity in behalf of the county, and the afternoon program will be by Mexican residents, including their band and Spanish dancing. A pulling contest for horse and mule teams is also an afternoon feature for this day. At night the fashion show will be held.

Friday is Long Beach day, when the Long Beach Municipal Band will head a big delegation, arriving in the morning and remaining for afternoon and evening concerts. Friday night's feature will be the live-stock parade and rodeo.

Saturday has been set aside as Whittier, Riverside, San Bernardino and Pomona Valley day, when those districts will organize delegations, and the concerts afternoon and evening will be given by the Pacific Electric Band. The closing hour for the fair has been set as midnight Saturday.

CITRUS THRIPS BOTHER

TULARE.—Now that the fumigation season is over, it is realized by citrus growers that the results of the campaign against scale were satisfactory. Citrus thrips, however, are very numerous on late summer growth, and are seriously interfering with leaf development. Results of spraying for control of gray scale are variable.

Big Cannery Operations

[illegible] canneries are women. In the Ontario plant the Golden State has perhaps seventy-five men. The men do the heavy work, trucking peaches to the workers and moving the filled cans and caring for the cooking. The feminine contingent does the slicing, pitting, cutting out of blemishes and packing of the sliced fruit into the cans.

The Ontario plant will run until about October 5 on peaches, then it will run pears. The Pomona plant will run tomatoes after the peaches are finished.

The Golden State, like the California Growers, sends much of its fruit direct to England. It ships a carload a day from each of the plants. Already 30,000 cases have been shipped to London.

Mr. Parrish estimated the peach crop in the Pomona Valley this year at about 25,000 tons. He said he had expected a crop of 40,000, but says that the lack of thinning of the peaches on the trees made them so much smaller that they did not come up to predictions in weight.

LIBBY, McNEIL & LIBBY

The Libby, McNeil & Libby Company, on January 1, 1920, took over the plant of the Chino Canning Company. Several plants of the Libby, McNeil & Libby chain in California handle only peaches, apricots and tomatoes, and of these the Chino concern is one. It employs 400 women and 135 men, with an average pay roll of $10,000 a week. The women work by the piece, at so much a box for cutting, and some of the best workers make from $36 to $38 a week. The cookers get so much a dozen cans and the truckers so much per hour. The men make from $30 to $40 a week.

The other fruit-canning plants of Libby, McNeil & Libby in California are at Burbank, Selma, Sunnyside, Sacramento, Gridley and Nimbus. From the northern part of the State the Chino concern has been receiving and putting up early Phillips. It also has been running Lovell free stones and Orange clings, the latter being mostly from the San Joaquin Valley, where [illegible] of this section on account of the [illegible] heat there.

The plant at Chino handles on an average seventy-five tons of peaches a day, turning these into 3500 cases of fruit put up for consumption. For the season, which began August 1 and will end the 10th of October, the superintendent, who is F. W. Fetterman, estimates a total of 5000 tons handled and 235,000 cases made ready for market.

Nineteen out of every twenty cases are shipped direct to Europe, more to England than any other country, but many also going to France, Norway, Sweden and Scotland. The firm of Libby, McNeil & Libby, of which T. L. Updegraff is Southern California manager, does a large export business, having branch houses in every large import center in the world. They also ship all over the United States. Within sixty days after the cannery shuts down, the warehouse will be empty, Mr. Fetterman asserts.

SUNSET CANNERY

At the Sunset Cannery in Pomona there are 350 employees and from eighty to ninety tons of peaches per day pass through the mill. From 2000 to 3000 cases of canned fruit turned out per day show where the raw fruit goes. By the end of the season, October 1, 150,000 cases will probably have been put up.

R. E. Page is superintendent at this cannery. The plant has recently been running on Phillips clings, and the free stone Salways.

NEW PACKING-HOUSE

ORANGE.—Orange will have a new citrus packing plant. The old Harper Fruit Company building on West Chapman avenue and the Santa Fe tracks has been leased by the Mutual Orange Distributors and will be operated under that name. R. D. Guthrie, Riverside representative, is in charge of the organization of the local plant and is preparing to launch a drive to interest citrus growers of this district in the project. New machinery will be installed as soon as organization plans are out of the tentative stage.

BURBANK BOY WINS FOR SECOND TIME

BURBANK.—Last spring a poultry club was organized in the grammar school here with fourteen boys enrolled. Eleven of these fourteen finished the contest and turned in a record for their work. This record includes the feed costs, labor costs, egg receipts and a financial summary.

John Scribner took first place in the contest. His percentage of production was 60 per cent, and his net profit per hen $1.89. John also won the contest last year. Russell Reid won second place. Roderick Scribner was awarded third.

The eleven boys who finished had 192 hens entered. The average feed cost per flock of 17 hens for the four months of the contest was $14.01. The average percentage of production was 55 per cent. The average net profit per flock was $13.81.

SIXTY BIRDS PASS TWO HUNDRED MARK

POMONA.—During August, in the Southern California Farm Bureau egg laying contest, sixty-one birds passed the two hundred egg mark. The average production for all contest birds for the first eleven [illegible] was [illegible] bird, No. [illegible], with a record of [illegible] eggs. The highest pen record for the same period was made by G. C. England's birds with an average production of 212 eggs each. G. C. England's entry won first pen ribbon for the month with a production of 237 3-4 eggs, but was followed very closely by the entries of M. L. Frick and M. A. Schofield, which took second and third ribbons, respectively. The three ribbons for high individual production for the month were all won by birds laying twenty-six eggs each, the tie being broken by previous production figures. It was necessary to go back to March records to break the tie for third place because of duplicate production of the two birds for the last five months. R. C. Gibson's bird, No. 214, won first place; Charles G. Weaver's bird, No. 384, took second place, and W. S. Hatch's bird, No. 106, third place.

The birds consumed on an average 3.02 pounds of grain, 3.05 pounds of mash, 2.17 pounds of green feed and gave a monthly production of 58-55 per cent.

This country produces more sulphate of ammonia than it consumes. In 1920, 367,000 tons were produced. We have exported practicallly 100,000 tons per year for the last two years.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 24, 1922.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

Sound Argument

A GOOD example of the difference between haphazard selling of farm products by individuals and systemnatic marketing by co-operative methods is cited by R. L. Churchill, manager of the California Lima Bean Growers' Association. Members of the association, according to Mr. Churchill, received 60 cents out of the consumer's dollar for last year's crop, while many growers who sold on their own responsibility had to be content with 35 cents. Some of the independents, he says, sold thousands of bags of limas at 5½ cents a pound, the same being sold later by purchasing dealers to wholesalers at around 9 cents. Thousands of bags of the co-operative growers' beans, handled through the association, brought 9 cents or better. The association is making a strenuous effort to increase its membership to include at least 85 per cent of the lima growers and in the face of such dollars and cents arguments as Mr. Churchill offers, it would seem reasonable to believe that the campaign will succeed of its purpose. Co-operative marketing has been convincingly demonstrated to be a thoroughly sound business proposition for the producer.

Good Investment

HUNDREDS of tons of deciduous fruits, mainly peaches and apricots, that would have rotted in the orchard, were rendered merchantable by drying on the ranch and at commercial dry yards in Southern California this year. It is estimated that over twice as great a tonnage of peaches was dried this year as during any previous year. Far-sighted growers saw a tremendous crop coming, and prepared drying facilities to take care of the fruit rejected by the canneries. There is a good market for this dried fruit, the carry-over of last year being very small. The fruit-drying campaign will have a beneficial effect on the deciduous fruit industry of Southern California. Growers who had no drying facilities would do well to unite, if their groves are small, with other growers to provide drying facilities, or to build drying trays and cutting tables if their acreage justifies this action. There is a concerted effort being made to get growers to cut out unprofitable peach trees and plant in their stead only varieties that are best for canning, drying and for sale fresh. While this campaign bears fruit, there will be a great tonnage of low-grade fruit that can best be disposed of by drying, which, this season's success proved, is as practicable in Southern California as in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys.

TO STUDY DISEASES

Dr. W. A. Taylor, chief of the United States Bureau of Plant Industry, has assigned Dr. Ivan C. Jagger to study the diseases of celery and lettuce in California. He has been engaged in studying these diseases in Florida and New York. He will probably locate at or near Chula Vista, in San Diego county, and commence work in Imperial Valley this winter.

BIG MINORCA EGG

Comes now A. G. Crawford, 2663 Loosemore street, Los Angeles, with a remarkable egg laid by a Black Minorca hen in his back-yard flock. The egg weighs five and three-quarters ounces and is nine inches around the long way and eight inches around the middle. It falls just a little short as to weight and measurements by comparison with an egg laid by a Plymouth Rock in the flock of A. E. DeCourt of Monterey Park, but Mr. Crawford thinks he has the biggest Minorca egg in this section. Next!

BIG CANNERY OPERATIONS NEAR CLOSE IN FAMOUS PEACH CENTER

BY BESS J. CRARY.

ONTARIO.—The Ontario district, long famous as a citrus center, has, during the last few years, become favorably and widely known as a successful deciduous fruit-producing area. The peach season is now drawing to a close and anyone traveling through Ontario by auto or by train, and seeing the constant line of trucks being driven to and from the doors of the two great canneries cannot but be impressed by the enormous output of peaches grown in the immediately surrounding country, and the magnitude of the business being done in preparing the crop for winter consumption.

At Ontario are the large cannery and drying yards of the California Growers' Association, Incorporated. Here, too, is the plant of the Golden State Cannery Company, one of three owned by this company in the same vicinity, the others being at Pomona and Cucamonga. At Pomona also is the Sunset Cannery, while at Chino is a bustling concern belonging to Libby, McNeil & Libby. Thus Ontario is in the middle of the peach canning section, with Pomona to the west, Chino to the south, and Cucamonga to the east. At each of the canneries mentioned thousands of cases of canned fruit are being turned out every one of the six working days of the week, and shipped to all parts of the world.

It is a curious fact that peaches from the Pomona-Chino Valley are better appreciated and demanded in greater quantity in England and the Continent than in the United States, and that the greater part of the product of the local canneries is shipped direct to brokers in London and Liverpool, hence it is distributed all over Europe. The fruit goes by truck to San Pedro, and from there by boat through the Panama Canal. Comparatively little is shipped to New York.

The peach crop this year in Southern California was probably the largest ever known. The limbs of the trees had to be propped up to hold the weight of the fruit-laden boughs, and even then many branches broke under the burden. It was a 100 per cent crop in quantity, but in quality the production was rather poor. A number of explanations have been offered for this. All agree, however, that the small size of the fruit was due to the fact that the trees were not thinned sufficiently.

One of the canneries complains that it could not get sufficient fruit of the proper dimensions. Consumers are constantly demanding larger fruit, and will not accept the small sizes. As a consequence, many thousands of tons of peaches were thrown on the ground because they were too small to market. The minimum accepted by the canneries previously has been two inches in diameter. That the minimum will probably we raised to two and one-half inches was asserted by the superintendent of one of the canneries.

The fruit contains more water this year than is usual, this being laid in general to the great amount of rain last winter, though in some cases it is probably due to the trees being irrigated too near the time of picking. One of the canneries reports that it has been cooking for five to six minutes less to a can than usual this year, because of the greater amount of water in the fruit.

CALIFORNIA GROWERS

The California Growers' Association originated as the San Antonio Growers' Association, or the "Co-operative Cannery." This is its third season as the California Growers. The organization consists of five associations, the one in Ontario and those in Rincon, Hemet, Elsinore and Fallbrook, respectively, the main office being at Ontario. The advantage of the union is that fruit can be conveniently shipped from one cannery to another if too much accumulates in one place to be taken care of before it spoils. The growers themselves furnish the fruit that is canned, and receive the profits, after expenses are deducted. There are about 600 to 700 growers in the organization, and they have some 6000 acres planted to fruit.

C. M. Sheets, superintendent of the Ontario cannery of the California Growers reports that the cannery has 1100 employees, counting the 200 in the drying yard. The pay roll is about $20,000 a week. The peach season will continue till about October 10, and by that time in excess of 10,000 tons of peaches will have been handled. Mr. Sheets estimates that 3000 green tons will be turned into 500 tons dried. This year's run of peaches is the biggest in the history of the organization.

The closing of the canning period will see 300,000 cases of peaches turned out. Most of these will be shipped to England at the rate of some 20,000 cases a week. Of the new pack, 50,000 cases have already gone to England and 5000 to New York by water for distribution in the United States. Muirs, Lovells and Elbertas, freestones and Sims, Phillips and Tuscan clings, all pass through this plant.

The California Growers assert they have the largest drying yards in California. And at that they are not satisfied. A representative from the association appeared recently before the Board of City Trustees and petitioned that State street, which runs just south of the plant, might be permanently closed, so that the association might purchase it and the triangular tract just south of the street for drying yard uses. The Trustees agreed.

For canning, peaches of good color, firm and of fairly good size are required. The clings are preferred and demanded. Freestones, therefore, are the ones usually dried, although any fruit too small or too ripe for canning is suitable.

GOLDEN STATE CANNERY

The Golden State Cannery has three plants, all within a few miles of each other in this vicinity and all under the management of Supt. P. H. Parrish. The Ontario plant handles ninety to 100 tons of fruit a day, has 350 employees and a weekly pay roll of $7500. At Cucamonga, eighty tons a day are handled by 250 employees, receiving $6500 a week. The figures for the Pomona plant are the same as those for Ontario. The output of the three canneries is around 9000 cases per day.

Mr. Parrish estimates that the three plants will by the end of the peach season have handled 9000 tons of the red-cheeked fruit, and made of them some 400,000 cases canned.

The majority of the employees in all th

FIVE-YEAR SURVEY PLANNED IN LOS ANGELES COUNTY GROVES

THE citrus groves of California taken collectively furnish the greatest citrus experiment station that the industry has. To accumulate the data on paying practices in groves throughout Los Angeles county, arrangements are being made for an extensive survey. This information, rightly collected from groves under the same management for at least five years, analyzed and made available to all growers, would prove of great practical value, the growers declare.

At a recent special meeting of the executive committee of the Citrus Growers' Department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, plans were drawn up for the survey that is contemplated. It will be undertaken by Prof. R. S. Vaile, of the Citrus Experiment Station, co-operating with the Agricultural Extension Service and the Citrus Growers' Department.

The object of the survey is to gather from a large number of growers their fertilizer and irrigation practices covering a period of at least five years, together with costs and yields. Supplementary data on cultivation, fumigation and other details will be gathered. There is a great deal of valuable information that can be obtained through such a survey—information that no small set of experiments can duplicate. The value of the survey will, of course, be determined by the number of reports obtained. It is hoped to get at least a thousand from Los Angeles county.

Prof. Vaile met with the committee and the following procedure was arranged: A local committee is appointed in each citrus district, the duties of this committee being to arrange for local publicity, a local meeting place for an evening meeting and to introduce Prof. Vaile among the growers. In addition, the committee will compile lists of growers who have been operating for at least five years, these names to be secured from packing-houses and other sources. These lists will be forwarded to the Agricultural Extension Service at least two weeks before the scheduled meeting in that community. The grower will be sent a copy of the questionnaire to fill out in so far as he is able. There will be an evening meeting on a Monday night in each of the leading citrus communities of the county. At this meeting Prof. Vaile will meet with the growers to fill out the blanks with the information desired and to answer any other questions. He will then spend three or four days in the community visiting the places from which the information has been secured and obtaining additional data. The figures received will be confidential and only the averages will be published.

The dates have been set for the evening meetings and the local committees are as follows:

September 25—Pasadena-La Canada-Lamanda Park-Alhambra, B. W. Chambers, chairman, B. Boele, C. J. Pegler. October 2—Monrovia-Duarte, R. T. Radford, chairman, Ralph Densmore, C. M. Downs. October 9—Azusa, M. B. Rounds, chairman, committee to be announced later. October 16—Glendora, W. A. Jones, chairman, C. E. Needham, John Brunjes. October 23—Covina, Harry Damerel, chairman, G. W. Aschenbrenner, Chas. Spier. October 30—San Dimas-Charter Oak, W. Fields, chairman, G. Ferguson, H. S. Gilman, W. A. Johnstone. November 6—La Verne, D. C. Arbuthnot, chairman, Will Landon. November 13—Claremont-North Pomona, J. B. Vaile, chairman, L. C. Bell, Ethelbert Johnson. November 20—Pomona, H. E. Wallcott, chairman, J. E. Adamson, R. L. Knox. November 27—Whittier, Sam Mendenhall, chairman, L. A. Brundige, T. G. Sutherland. December 11—Rivers, F. L. Maurer, chairman, A. McGregor, Osborn Burke.

A meeting was held at San Fernando on September 18, the committee there consisting of J. R. Allen, chairman, L. Lloyd, J. Culbertson and F. A. Pomeroy.

Southern California Birds Win at Sacramento

OUR LEGHORNS AGAIN IN LEAD. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

THE annual poultry, pigeon and rabbit show given under the auspices of the State Agricultural Society in conjunction with the California State Fair, has developed from a mere poultry show to the dimensions of an exhibition; in brief, has become an institution that breeders and fanciers look forward to with a great deal of pleasure. Its steady growth has been so pronounced that the present buildings are inadequate to house the birds' property, and besides are not adapted to displaying the birds to the best advantage. In order to give place to all the exhibits, double decking of coops had to be resorted to; this is never satisfactory; the upper tier of coops is too elevated to catch the vision of the average person and the lower tier is still more inconveniently situated. This condition should be remedied by the erection of a new building of ample proportion to meet the growing demands of exhibitors. Sacramento being subjected to a few "hot spells" about Fair time, the ventilation should be carefully studied so as to prevent suffering from heat; the lighting scheme should also be carefully considered. A northern light is always clearer than any other. If these improvements can be introduced, we believe the entries will be doubled within the next few years.

It was indeed a pleasure to note the good condition of the fowls on dress parade. Not for some years has there been so early a development in plumage; many of the birds were almost completely furnished with their new feathers. All the breeds and varieties commanding commercial distinction were well represented; there was a really meritorious exhibit of pigeons, consisting of many varieties, the whole presenting a somewhat diversified and pleasing effect in color schemes in plumage, as well as strong variations in type; the display of turkeys was good; water fowl were limited as to numbers, but of standard quality; the display of rabbits was quite complete, representing all breeds possessing economic qualities.

As indicating the state-wide interest in the event, there were seventy-one exhibitors in the poultry classes, sixteen of pigeons and twenty-nine of rabbits. Of this number, only about a dozen people were from south of the Tehachapi. This might be a matter of some regret, but the fact that among this small number of exhibitors some of the highest honors in the competitive classes were distributed. The strong classes constituted the R. I. Reds, Plymouth Rocks, and Wyandottes; as close seconds, the Orpingtons loom large; Asiatics rather small, and limited almost wholly to the Light Brahma; bantam exhibits covered all breeds and varieties, all of which showed quality. In breeds of less popularity along commercial lines, there were Buff, Brown and Black Leghorns, Lakenfelders, White Crested Black Polish, and some others; in the English classes, Buff, White and Black Orpingtons were a good entry, all of which gave evidence of intelligent handling in the breeding pen. The judging was wholly in the hands of California talent, a condition that we hope will be generally observed in all our shows in the future. Our California poultrymen and fanciers are quite as capable in good performances in cap and linen dusters as some eastern talent that "has been among us"—but that is quite another story.

It is indeed pleasant to report that a number of the highest honors at this fixture were won by the Southern California breeders. To P. J. Peltier of Compton belongs the distinction of owning the best female in the show, the bird being a superb White Leghorn pullet; he also won second best pen on the same breed. Messrs. Blackman and Mumford, Los Angeles, won best male in ornamental bantams, on a Rose Comb Black Cock; also best female on a Black Cochin hen, and best pen on the same breed. The same people also won first on best pair of Bronze turkeys.

Trophy cups to be competed for in the poultry division of Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona, October 17-21.

Best female (large classes) at California State Fair poultry show of 1922, an S. C. White Leghorn pullet, owned by P. J. Peltier, Compton.

The County Fair Show

The breeders and fanciers of the Pomona Valley are certainly showing enterprise and initiative in getting up a rattling poultry show in conjunction with the Los Angeles County Fair, which is to be held October 17 to 21, 1922. The premiums are liberal to a fault; the choice of competent judges, all that can be desired; the specials alluring beyond the grasp of avarice, all of which will insure splendid entries. It promises to be a red letter event in the onward trend of poultry culture in Southern California.

As an indication of good sportsmanship, it might be well to mention that there will be $1,000 in cash prizes; twenty-eight silver cups, and $130 in cash specials. The awards in the single classes will be for best male $5, best female $5, with ten of a variety to complete the class. On the same conditions the awards are $2 on male and female bantams, five to complete the class,. The remainder of the awards are substantially as follows:

For largest and best display of standard bred poultry, by a single exhibitor, points to count.

First prize	$15.00
Second prize	$10.00

For largest and best display of standard bred poultry by a novice, points to count:

First prize	$15.00
Second prize	$10.00

To compete for above prizes an exhibit or must have at least ten entries:

For best exhibition pen in the show	$15.00
For second best exhibition pen in the show	10.00
For third best exhibition pen in the show	5.00
For best male in the show	10.00
For best female in the show	10.00
For best pen in the Asiatic Division, four pens to fill	10.00
For best pen in the American Division, four pens to fill	10.00
For best pen in the Mediterranean Division, four pens to fill	10.00
For best pen in the English Division, four pens to fill	10.00
For best display of Bantams, by a single exhibitor, points to count	15.00
For second best display of Bantams	10.00
For largest display of non-standard Bantams	10.00
For largest entry by any one exhibitor	10.00
Second	7.50
Third	5.00
For best drake	2.50
For best duck	2.50
For best gander	2.50
For best goose	2.50
Best male guinea	2.50
Best female guinea	2.50
For best Tom Turkey	2.50
For best Hen Turkey	2.50

There will also be laying yard contests to consist of six females and one male to be judged on physical and external laying points, also a capon class and an egg exhibit, all of which will make for a banner event in poultry circles. Paul E. Kennedy will be superintendent of the poultry exhibits and the event will be judged by E. C. Branch, J. C. Williams, and F. Thott.

A Pioneer Passes

In the death (which occurred at his home in San Jose during the middle of August) of Mr. Charles R. Harker, the veteran breeder, judge and editor of The Pacific Poultry Breeder, another of the old guard has answered to the last call. In his youth, Mr. Harker was of the pioneers in poultry culture, being associated with such well-known breeders of national recognition, as I. K. Felch, Philander Williams, J. Y. Bicknell, E. N. Miles and others of the early eighties; later he came to California from New York City, where he published the Poultry Bulletin, one of the first papers to take up the exploitation of the poultry industry. Arriving some time in the late eighties, he settled in San Jose, and soon after commenced the publication of the Fanciers' Monthly and Pacific Poultry Breeder, which he ably conducted up to the time of his death. In addition to his activities as a class journalist, he also bred pure-blooded poultry, acted as judge at poultry shows, and was for years the heart and soul of the San Jose poultry show, which under his direction became something more than a local fixture. During all these years his sound judgment and clear thinking made his paper authoritative on poultry matters on this coast. None of the so-called "systems" for making great wealth out of chickens ever found tolerance in his columns; the flamboyant style of advertising that characterizes the publicity literature of some breeders only aroused his resentment, which found free expression in his writings; and the stories of whole flocks of 250 and 300-eggers only excited his derision. Always conservative in statement and sane in his conclusion, his was an influence that will be sadly missed among the better class of breeders. His friends were legion in Southern California, all of whom will miss his strong individuality and the vivid personal equation that characterized his editorial opinions and the clarity that featured his paper. "After life's fitful fever he sleeps well."

Depth or Quantity of Litter

Where birds are confined to limited quarters and scratching facilities have to be provided, the depth or quantity of litter is often a matter of conjecture with the back lotter. The conditions that must be provided is sufficient seclusion for the scratch feed, so that the hens will have to really hunt (scratch) to find it; obviously the deeper, within certain limits the better. In the opinion of experienced breeders it should be from three to four inches, though we have known people who allowed six inches of cut straw to a flock of Asiatics. On the farm, the scratching material often represents little or no direct cost beyond labor in handling it; likewise after it has served for some time and has become worn, it presents some value both as a fertilizer and the humus or vegetable fiber that it contains. With the city man, however (unless he also enjoys the possession of a cultivated garden,) this does not always apply, and the refurnishing with new material often represents an additional expense. In lieu of this the backlotter may be justified in reducing the depth or quantity of scratching to less than three or four inches. This really is a matter for individual choice rather than a hard and fast rule. But in any event the scratching quarters should be kept sanitary and the hens busy. To allow the material to become filthy is to endanger the health of the birds.

What Causes Brown and White Shell Eggs

It is, indeed a mooted question why certain breeds lay brown-shelled eggs and others white, and while of no great economic significance, nevertheless, why should two breeds of one species lay different colored eggs? In so far as my knowledge goes, I have never seen an explanation, nor a theory advanced that would explain the phenomenon. Edward Brown, in the Feathered World, has a reference to the subject, but his paragraph is more a question than an answer. Often the color of brown-shelled egg will present considerable variation over a given period, but this is a mere admission of a fact which explains nothing. Nevertheless, the color of shells is a dominant breed characteristic of heavy breeds, and a white-shelled egg of the light; but why it is so, is a problem that still awaits a solution.

Apparently it has no connection with color scheme in plumage nor head and leg points. Mr. Brown, however, calls attention to variations, namely: "Suggestions have been made, based upon the tendency with very heavy-laying hens of races which naturally produce dark-shelled eggs, to these becoming lighter in tint after a period of production, and that whilst the original fowls lay eggs with tinted or brown shells, white shells are due to increase of the fecundity. It may be so, yet we find that such breeds as the Dorking, which are not, and never have been, so far as our knowledge goes, heavy layers, do not yield any but white-shelled eggs. No one seems to have attempted to find solution for the problem on scientific lines. In respect to color of yolks there is evidence that the food and nature of the soil, together with the herbage, have considerable influence, as might be anticipated. There is nothing to suggest that either of these have an effect upon the pigmentation of the shell. Many prefer breeds laying white-shelled simply because the most popular laying breeds are producers of white shells. What we want to know is whether that is cause or effect, or whether one has anything to do with the other? It is a complete mystery, and for that reason should inspire investigators to solve the problem.

Judging at Oakland and Los Angeles

There will be a free exchange of judges between the Los Angeles and Oakland Poultry shows, State talent in both cases being dominant. At the northern function, J. C. Williams of Fullerton, E. J. Teaney of Inglewood and P. J. Peltier of Compton, all Southern California will help place the awards. At the Los Angeles show such well-known judges as C. G. Hinds of Berkeley, William S. Russell and Robert V. Moore, both of San Leandro, will be among those to wear the linen duster. The twenty-first annual show of the California State Pigeon Club will also be held in conjunction with the Oakland fixture. The Rhode Island Reds will be passed on by James Tucker of Detroit.

What is a "Blind" Egg?

A Los Angeles correspondent writes to know what a "blind" egg really is; wants a definition of the term.

We confess it was a "new one" on us, his letter was the first information to come our way intimating that there really was such a thing. The term does not apply to any grade or classification recognized by the trade. It is a localism used by the sorters and candlers where eggs are packed and graded according to quality, and may cover a specimen penalized for clots, spots or checks (dirty,) etc., where the defect is not readily detected by the naked eye. To really get at its standing the sorters "sound" it much as one would a watermelon to learn of its degree of ripeness. Hence any egg that is slightly defective in any that nullifies its keeping qualities.

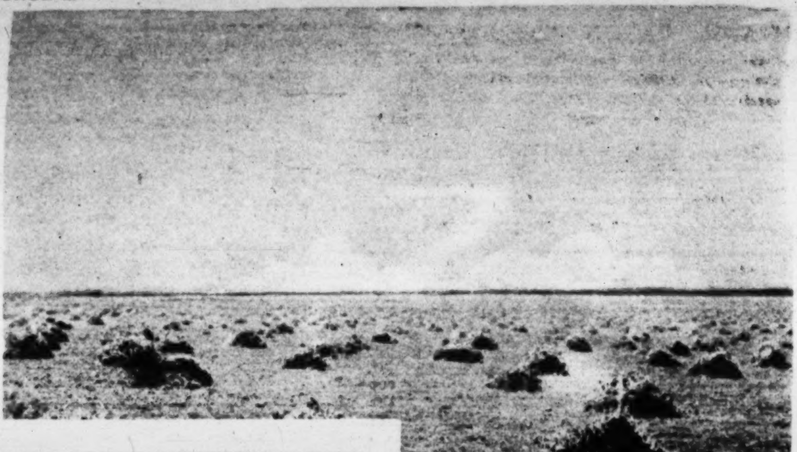
Harvesting Beans Along the Southland Coast

BY GEORGE LAW

Luxuriant stand of blackeye beans near El Toro.



Lima vines cocked for sun curing of beans.

Blackeye beans, showing pods above leaf stocks.

ON the warm mesas above the sea in that long unsettled sector of the highway to San Diego, the first of the huge lima bean crop matured in August, and the harvesting was well under way by the beginning of September.

In this region, sheltered by foothills on the east and exposed to the full moderating influence of the ocean, ideal conditions for lima culture are realized. The soil warms rapidly in the spring, permitting the planting to begin in April. Then all through the growing season the air is moist and cool, feeding the bean leaves with nitrogen-laden dew in perfect supplement of the moisture and nutriment contributed by the dry-farmed soil. And later on the harvesting is favored by an atmosphere of autumnal dryness.

While the soil is worked almost the whole year round, the beans occupy the land only for a brief four months. For, sprouting within a week after they are pressed into their soft damp beds by the planter, they make an exceedingly rapid growth. The ranchers are kept busy cultivating and hoeing up to the time the care of the fields is stopped by the spreading of the vines across the 3-foot spaces. Then the fields become billowy carpets of Nile-green leafage. The little creamy white blossoms come and go inconspicuously, like lilies of the valley hidden in their greenery. Rapidly the pods form and swell. Crisp and sappy, they break to the slightest pressure of the fingers and yield fresh sweet morsels for the tables of the growers, and for munching uncooked by the growers' children. Before long the pods, wide, long and full, begin to take on the tint of buckskin; the leaves mottle yellow and the grower knows that the time of reaping has come.

The bean cutters are sled-like devices. From each runner a long sharp blade angles inward. The cutter, pulled by a team, straddles two rows, and as it glides along the blades cuts the main stalks an inch below the surface of the ground. At the same time the converging runners tumble the cut vines over into a single massed line. The cutter is followed by a curious rake, which pitches several of the lines, according to the width of the rake, into one. The rake tilts back at an oblique angle and consists of a shaft of prongs housed within a cylinder of stationary bars. The shaft is cogged with the wheels in a manner to cause reverse revolutions; the prongs catch up the vines and bandy them down the oblique length of the cylinder. A one-team rake passes up one line and down the alternate line, shifting both to the center. As each line consists of two cut rows, the rake leaves six rows of beans piled into one.

The next operation resembles the cocking of hay. Men with pitchforks divide the windrows into small piles. The beans are then left to cure, a matter of several weeks, depending upon the condition of the weather. It is from this time forward until the threshing is over that the growers long for dry sunny days, a breath of the desert in the atmosphere. This is the precarious interval when too much fog or premature rains may play havoc with the bean crop. April planted beans can usually be threshed in September; herein the growers along the southern coast may be said to enjoy an advantage over the bean producers northward to Santa Barbara, whose cooler and moister situations generally retard the planting until May, thus causing the threshing to extend well into October. The pods must be dry and brittle, the beans cured to a white crisp, before the final operation of threshing, sacking and storing may be carried out in safety.

The threshing machine and a tractor to run it are set up at a central point to serve a certain convenient radius of the field. As most of the bean growers farm hundreds or even thousands of acres, the threshing outfits have to be moved about in order to take care of the great crops. From the threshing center wagons radiate to and fro, feeding the machine with a continuous stream of bean plants. The wagons are usually driven by boys, while the more able workers pitch on the cocks of bean vines. Each wagon is loaded by two pitchers; then the driver goes into the thresher, while the pitchers remain out in the field, passing racy comment on the boss's skill in keeping the wagons rolling.

A considerable crew is needed to operate the thresher. From the wagons the vines are pitched, or dumped, on to an elevated platform, which in turn is lifted by machinery to dump the stack of vines into the maw of the thresher. The thresher is often fed a whole wagonload at a time. Thus the procession is kept moving, and the machine sets a pace that allows no respite to the men. Crews are occasionally changed about, individuals released to snatch a bite to eat; but the threshing goes on without interruption as long as the air remains dry and clear, even far into the night. It is a drama of noise, dust and snappy activity tuned to the throb and rumble of machinery; by night a sort of mysterious, elfish industry wildly illuminated by burning stacks of straw.

The vines entering the maw are churned and beaten into bits; the beans fall below while the straw is blown out through a spout to settle into piles thirty feet away. The beans flow in a solid stream out of a small vent in the side of the thresher. It is not as yet a purified stream. Mixed with the white beans are bits of rubbish, pebbles and red lady-bugs. The stream falls upon a screen, so that the purified white product them into a trough. The debris, broken beans and lady-bugs fall through the screen, so that the purified white product of the enterprise emerges into the trough. Down the trough the limas slide into the mouths of sacks. Several men are kept busy in the sacking booth, often a compartment partitioned off by canvas from the thresher's dust. One guides the beans into the sacks; another weighs the sacks, adding or taking out to secure an exact 100-pound content; and another sews up the sacks and piles them in graceful tiers that attract fond glances from the owner.

Practically the entire lima bean industry is carried on by leaseholders on the great unirrigated tracts of valuable land in the southern coastal region. The grower generally pays a rent privilege of from one quarter to one-third of his harvested crop to the proprietor of the land.

Cyanamid is made in this county only at Niagara Falls.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON

MR. H. J. RYAN, Los Angeles County Horticultural Commissioner, kindly sends the following valuable suggestions regarding oak tree pests:

Each year about this time we receive inquiries from local property owners in regard to the activities of the oak twig girdler, which seem to be more than usually prevalent this year. I have seen abundant evidence of their work on live oaks within the past two weeks as far north as Santa Barbara. The most apparent evidence of injury by this insect is the occurrence of dead leaves on the terminal twigs of injured branches.

The only control suggested by E. O. Essig in "Injurious and Beneficial Insects" is the cutting out and prompt burning of infested twigs during the late fall and winter. The willow, California buckeye and hazlenut are listed as hosts in addition to the coast live oak (Quercus agrifolia.) No case has ever come to my knowledge of the dying of any trees affected, though I presume it could kill a very small tree.

Another pest of the live oak that causes periodic damage is the California oak worm, which often entirely defoliates large trees; to the casual observer the trees will appear to be dead. As a matter of fact, this gives them only a temporary setback, and they seem to be able to produce a crop of leaves the following year which are molested very little by the worms.

This last year hundreds of trees were defoliated in the neighborhood of Hollywood, west of Cahuenga Pass, and I have seen moths among the oaks north of Glendale in Verdugo Canyon. There is nothing to be done for the latter pest except that if the property owner has only one or two small trees infested, he could doubtless get a very thorough control by spraying with lead arsenate. This would hardly be practicable over a large area, because of the great cost and the lack of proper machinery.

Farmers' Bulletin No. 1076 on the California Oak Worm suggests the following under "Methods of Control:"

"During that period of this never-ending warfare at which the worm is at its greatest increase, the trees suffer, and man must join the fight if he would save the appearance of his trees for the year and prevent the nuisance of a plague of the worms.

"The best spray to use against the worm is 3 to 5 pounds of arsenate of lead paste, or 1½ to 2½ pounds of arsenate of lead in dry powdered form, dissolved in fifty gallons of water. A power sprayer should be used, the mixture should be kept well agitated, and the entire foliage should be covered with a fine mist.

"To get the best results the trees should be sprayed while the worms are in the younger stages. They are more easily killed then, and have done very little damage. Do not wait until the trees are stripped and the worms are full grown.

"If the moths are abundant about the trees in June and early July, a heavy crop of worms probably will appear during the late summer, with the resulting leafless trees. To prevent this, spray both live and deciduous oaks during the last of July or the first of August. If the moths are common in October and November, the worms will do the most damage to the live oaks in April and May. To prevent this, spray during March and April. The important thing is to wait until most of the eggs of the generation have hatched and then to spray at once while the worms are small.

"If only one spraying is to be given, spraying the live oaks in the spring is the better time, for, under the usual California rainless summer conditions, the poison will remain on the leaves until September and will catch both generations of worms.

"As a usual thing the property owner will get better results for less money by hiring a commercial tree sprayer to do the work. Choose a tree sprayer by the reputation he has made, and then follow his advice."

Pampas Grass on Whittier Ranch of Mrs. Harriett Strong.

An interesting bit of agricultural history is told by Mrs. Strong about the pampas grass driveway border. Back in the trying days of '93, when fruit was a drug on the market, she says, "tassels" from the grass were readily salable to the German government for use as plumes for the Kaiser's cavalry horses.

To Rejuvenate Trees

Many letters come to this department stating the writer has certain kinds of fruit trees which will not bear and wishes to know "what to top-work them to." They are advised, as a rule, to leave them alone. Why people who fail to make trees bear think top-working will help them is a problem too deep for the Garden Beautiful editor. If you have one each of peach, apple, apricot and pear, and none of them will fruit for you, you cannot make any tree fruit. The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our trees, but in ourselves. The thing to do is to find out what is wrong. If it is wrong treatment, treat 'em right. And they will repay you. Even if soil conditions are wrong they may generally be righted. But if obstacles which prevent fruiting are insurmountable, top-working will not help a "whit."

Mexican Jumping Bean

Several persons have of late written to ask what is the origin of the Mexican "jumping bean," sold upon the streets of Los Angeles, the name of the plant from which it comes, the cause of the jump, etc. The "jump" is caused by the acrobatic feats of a worm, the larva of a moth known to science as Carpocapsa saltitans. The seeds are from a euphorbiaceous plant, Sebastiana Palmeri. The Mexicans call the commercial commodity "Devil's Bean" or "Brincaderos" (jumpers.) How long the worm stays in the seed is not known to the writer, but the food supply in a seed is very small and the worm soon enters the pupa state to emerge as a moth and it evidently stays in the seed only as a worm. It must be but a week or two at most, yet a cheerful liar who was selling them near The Times office told the writer he had known the jumping to prevail for twelve to fourteen months. In a full year's supply, refurnished monthly, it doubtless will. The small tree grows only near Alamos, Mexico, and is there known as the Palo de la flecha, cuero de las semillas brincaderas (Arrow tree, which produces the jumping beans.) The seeds were first collected near Alamos, Son., by Dr. Palmer, in 1899. Sebastiana Palmeri was so named by Dr. J. N. Rose of Washington, D. C., in 1891. The jumping bean was first known to American scientists about 1870.

somehow,

But she timidly did that very thing to the suppressed fury of his honor, who had cherished a long sequence, according to rule, and was further nursing the other joker and three kings.

"It's too bad," she ventured, looking around at Edgerton, whose entire hand was being minutely counted by Mrs. Lorrimore.

"I don't mind!" said the young fellow, laughing; and he leaned a trifle nearer and added under his breath: "But suppose I had played for stakes!"

Into her timid and faded eyes came the ghost of a glimmer—the momentary sparkle of fun, and went out very quickly.

But it had been there for a second and thereafter Edgerton found a curious pleasure in making it come back at intervals.

Luck bedeviled his honor; the fair Mrs. Lorrimore won steadily without the least respect for the law and no consideration at all for the sanctity of the bench; and the judge became peevish. He was a very rich man.

Presently he had enough of it—letters to write for the morning mail—and got himself out and upstairs with the dignity of a fly-pestered ox.

"Horrid old stinge," observed Mrs. Lorrimore in Edgerton's ear, and laughed her peculiarly sweet and captivating laugh as a servant returned with his honor's check in an angrily scrawled envelope.

Mrs. Rivett had passed into a farther room, where the high gilded pipes of an organ glimmered in the subdued light. Edgerton saw her seated there—a thin, bejeweled little figure beneath the tall gothic majesty of the pipes.

After a while the low harmony of an old-time hymn stole into the card room.

Those at the bridge tables remained silent and absorbed, except Mr. Rivett, who cautiously turned his sphinxlike countenance toward the farther dusk where his wife was seated.

Edgerton stood behind Diana's chair, watching. Presently he went over to Silvette, lingered for a while, then came back to Diana again.

An hour later Mr. Rivett said abruptly: "Does anybody care to dance?"

The effect was like a pistol shot off lotus eaters. Slowly the players came out of their absorption; color returned faintly to white, tense faces.

"I suppose I may ask it?" added Mr. Rivett dryly. "I'm a heavy loser."

"Sure thing, dad," said Jack with a laugh. "I'm about even, and I venture to ask it, too. Does anybody here want to dance? You surely won't object," he added mischievously to Silvette.

"I have no right to say anything at all," she laughed.

"Every right—the right of the conqueror! Accept my bow and spear—and speak! . . . How is it with your sister?"

"I'm afraid I haven't any voice in the matter, either," said Diana serenely. "It is for the losers to decide."

They decided to dance. Mrs. Rivett came from the dim music room and stood watching them with her little worn hands folded, while servants lighted and cleared the larger drawing-room, designed for a ballroom, with its little gilded balcony aloft and the great concert grand in its carved and gilded foliations sprawling like a bedizened elephant in the corner.

A servant was sent for "mademoiselle"—evidently somebody who lived somewhere in the house whose duties included dance music. Meanwhile Edgerton sat down at the piano, and began a fascinating Spanish waltz.

"Traitor," whispered a fresh, young voice at his elbow, and he looked up into the winning eyes of Diana.

"Hello," he said: "how went the battle?"

"The cards?"

"Yes."

"As usual, thank you."

"Oh! And how do they usually go with you, fair cousin?"

"Well enough," she said briefly.

She stood leaning on the piano.

"You play cleverly," she observed.

"Oh, yes—cleverly. There's nothing else to anything I do."

"Isn't that enough?"

"Is it, Diana?"

"Enough as far as music is concerned," she said impatiently. "Did you ever see a musical virtuoso whom a real man didn't want to kick? And as for you," she added, "you are a traitor. You said you would ask me to dance. Now, if you ask me, I won't!"

Still playing, he continued to look up at her smilingly.

"What do you really care about me, anyway?" he said. "I wish you'd tell me, Diana."

"Honestly, or flippantly?"

"Honestly."

"Masks off, you mean?"

"Yes—as far off as they'll come."

"I care a lot about you."

"You say it too frankly," he laughed.

"What I say, I say. . . . Did you find Christine Rivett agreeable at dinner?"

"She's interesting."

"Is that all!" evidently disappointed.

"Well, Christine's very fetching," said Edgerton.

"That is far more serious."

"Indeed, it is. I've qualified as an aspirant for her hand and fortune already."

"I don't doubt it," Diana returned calmly. "That's one reason her father decided to employ us."

She said it unsmilingly and after he had looked up at her once or twice he said: "Of course you are joking."

"Oh, yes; it's one kind of a jest. Meanwhile here comes a young person in black—doubtless mademoiselle. . . . I'm not going to dance with you; don't compose your features in that snug fashion. You're a traitor, and I won't."

She turned on her heel and advanced leisurely toward Col. Curmew, who immediately began to twirl his mustache and shoot his cuffs when, without warning, she sheered off into the receptive arms of Jack Rivett, and was presently drifting across the room in a Viennese waltz.

Others were dancing now; Edgerton went over and asked his hostess—an old New York custom now obsolete—who colored and smiled at him, explaining that she had renounced that art with the advent of rheumatism. So, after a while, he took out her daughter, Christine—also an obsolete custom—who soon, however, had enough of him as a dancer, and took him into the conservatory.

The others danced until supper time; midnight found them separating on the stairs. Edgerton and Christine Rivett had rather a prolonged leave-taking, then shook hands cordially in plain view of everybody.

Diana, passing with Silvette, said a careless goodnight, to him. Silvette, retaining her sister's arm, detained him for a moment in conversation; then they went away together, Diana dismissing him with an inattentive nod.

But, as he was prepared for his pillow, a servant brought an envelope to his door and tucked it under the sill.

Inside was a single line:

"Good night, Jim."

The handwriting was now familiar to him.

Guests arrived and guests departed from Adriutha, butthe original gathering remained.

The people who came and went were about the kind that Edgerton had expected to encounter—people identified with nothing in particular except money, and not always with that.

After that first stormy night in June, the splendor of a limpid, rain-washed morning had revealed to him the gross outward impossibility of this place of millions—the vast, new "villa," red-tiled and yellow-walled, hideous in its multiplicity of roofs, angles, terraces and bays, with outlying works of rubble, concrete and railroad-station floral embellishment.

Scarring the green crypt of nature, staining the glass of the stream with painted reflections of its architectural deformities, Adriutha Lodge sprawled monsterlike and naked in the summer sunshine.

Garage, hothouses, stables, barns, a farm, a model dairy, like grewsome spawn of a common architectural dam, affronted the woods and meadows of this little valley set among the remote Berkshires.

Edgerton, walking his horse beside Diana's, suddenly drew bridle with an uncontrollable gesture of disgust:

"Listen to me," he said: "where man's despoiling labor pollutes nature, sadness and resignation make heavy the hearts of her true lovers; but where man's abominable ignorance desecrates, reigns a more shocking desolation which no modest heart ever forgives!"

MUSHAM'S ESSAY

ly he rubbed his brows, took two steps, glanced up—and experienced a profound shock, for the pier mirror now showed him the image of a woman without legs, the rose colored kimono dangling empty. For an instant he gasped in stupid amazement. Then a swift alarm flashed along his nerves—some trick here! He stepped to the bedroom door and looked in.

A glance revealed the trick. That was a pillow on the chair by the dressing table, with a rose colored kimono over it. The beautiful penitent was not in the room. But the door at the end of the dressing table stood ajar. She must have gone in there.

It was a trick! She had been fooling him with the appeal in her eloquent eyes and on her pretty lips—some deviltry afoot. It came to him that he had seen Altman at the door a little way down the hall. Probably this open door led to Altman's apartment. In a surge of righteous anger he stepped over, closed the door, and shot the bolt; then stood stock still in a sort of paralysis. She was in there stealing something; he felt sure of that.

The knob of the door in front of him turned noiselessly, but of course, the door did not open. That was her hand on the opposite knob; he could see that she was pressing against the door from the other side, trying to force it open. Then the pressure ceased; the knob turned quickly back and forth; she gave it a little shake. Signals—so she must have comprehended that the bolt had been shot and she was trapped on the other side. That turning and shaking of the knob was a plea. He stood motionless. A whisper came through the keyhole:

"Uncle Joe, let me in!"

So she guessed he had discovered the trick and shot the bolt!

In spite of the momentary surge of anger it shook Musham deeply. He fairly saw her stooping to utter that quick, desperate whisper—golden head, white shoulders, round, white arms; in a trap, and as beautiful a creature as ever the jaws of a trap closed upon. In outline it was clear enough to him; the next suite belonged to Altman; she had gone in there to steal—a crime going on under his nose.

But her penitence—had there been something real in that, after all? That trap meant prison for her—a million pities for so lovely a creature, who might repent even if she hadn't already! He had only to extend his hand and draw the bolt.

A faint odor of cosmetics rose to him from the dressing table; a silky white garment lay on a chair; paraphernalia of the enchantress. The whisper came again:

"Let me in, Uncle Joe"—a note of terror in it, he thought. To emphasize it she lightly shook the knob again.

She was trapped, two feet away from him, with the hunters at hand. Holding her in the trap was almost like running a spear through her quivering body with his own hand. His heart trembled; and he had only to reach out and draw the bolt. The faint odor of cosmetics rose to him.

The natural color of his face faded to a patchy sort of yellow, the wrinkles deepened in dogged lines, his eyes were heavy with woe. But he turned sullenly from the bolted door and walked out of the room. Probably she was still shaking the knob and whispering through the keyhole. It was not yet too late; his finger was on the trigger, but he had not pressed it. He stood a moment, an aged mask of misery wretched to the core. Doubtless she was still appealing. Miserably he turned to the telephone, took down the receiver, and spoke brusquely:

"This is room 347. There's a robbery going on up here. Send a detective or somebody quick. Yes, 347. Be quick!"

Then he went over and sat on the arm of the chair, putting a hand to his brow, which was furrowed as though he had a severe headache.

Three detectives came on the run. Musham gave them a dozen words and a gesture. They hurried into the bedroom, drew the bolt and caught her, dragging her in. Musham had to look her in the face—her face white under the rouge, with great frightened eyes. He had driven the spear through her.

During the commotion fat, bald Altman was pumping Musham's hand, babbling excited gratitude and congratulations. But Musham cared nothing about Altman and his foolish jewels—would as soon he lost them as not.

Next day a round-faced young man with a neat little black mustache, who looked as though he might be well intentioned, was babbling gratitude and appreciation—having been let out of a most uncomfortable position, because a woman taken in theft is in a poor situation to blackmail anybody. But Musham told him with grim candor that he had been a fool and deserved to suffer more than he had.

The evening of that next day he sat alone in his study. She intrigued his heart. In an odd, honorable, ghostly fashion—hoping for repentance—he loved the pretty, sparkling creature. Yet he had handed her over to the hunters. For she was a criminal, an habitual, practiced breaker of the law—engaging in crime under his nose, so that he had been obliged either to become an accomplice to the crime or to denounce it.

"Sloppy, maudlin, sentiment, disloyal to the law, soft, without the courage to strike home," he had written.

Sitting gauntly upright by the study table the old lawyer laid a bony hand on the manuscript—having justified a lifelong faith by words.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALLMENTS

James Edgerton returns from Paris and finds that the house of Edgerton, Tennant & Co., from which he has derived his income, has failed, leaving him practically penniless. Arriving in New York he goes to his club and resigns. Thence to his apartment, left a year previously in care of a janitor. Upon entering he finds the apartment occupied by two young women, Diana and Silvette Tennant, distant cousins, likewise left stranded financially by the failure of the firm. Edgerton upon entering his own apartment is mistaken for a burglar by Diana and she threatens to call the janitor and begs him to leave at once. He asks for an explanation. Diana explains. Then her sister Silvette appears on the scene and insists upon Edgerton's remaining and occupying the spare room. The Tennant sisters having taken the apartment for the purpose of advertising for engagements as social entertainers. Edgerton proposes that he be allowed to join the group, his name, with its social prestige and the charm and beauty of his cousins being sure, he insists, to attract newly made millionaires, thus insuring the trio a comfortable income. The young women agree and a Mr. Rivett calls accompanied by Col. Curmew. An agreement is quickly reached and the trio arrange to go to the Rivett home in the Berkshires for the summer to assist the millionaire and his wife in entertaining their guests. After the departure of Rivett the cousins exchange personal confidences. Edgerton christens Diana Japonette and the first stages of a love affair develops. Two days later Diana, Silvette and Edgerton arrive at Adriutha, the Rivett's home in the Berkshires. Diana and Silvette while discussing their affairs mention Edgerton and Diana admits her keen interest in her distant cousin, but because of their mutual poverty promises her sister to put him out of her thoughts.

"YOU were quite mad over young Inwood in Keno," mused Silvette.

"Yes. . . . I realize that I like men. I enjoy them; if I had my way, I'd carry on like the deuce with every man who took my fancy, before I come to the final decision and spoil life for myself."

"You carry on like the deuce now, sister," said Silvette, laughing.

"I don't do it enough," retorted Diana fiercely; "what have I got to look forward to, after all?—a homeless life of social employment, an old age of gossip and cards! —or, if I win out, a loveless middle age wearing some wealthy man's name and pearls, and all the rest dashed out—the brightness, the youth of things, the hope of things, children"—

"You don't want children!" exclaimed Silvette, horrified; "grubby little things! I thought you hated them!"

"Grubby little things," repeated the girl slowly; "so I do, in theory."

Diana, on impulse, sat down at the little fly-away desk and scribbled a note.

"Take it to Mr. Edgerton," she said to the maid.

Edgerton, dressing leisurely, read the note where he stood under the electric cluster.

"Dear Jim: The rain, the world, and things oppress me. So do you sometimes . . . There's a long future ahead of me, I dread it—who was eager for the plunge a few days since. I seem to be standing on the threshold of things in general, waiting for my cue to enter, but with little heart for the stage now. Alas, I am already tired before the overture has ended.

"If we dance tonight, ask me. Probably I'm the only girl in the house who could stand a dance with you—and I'm not so certain about myself. . . . But if we play bridge, continue not to sit at our table. I ask it of you for reasons which are none of your business. Indulge my whim, please.

"JAPONETTE."

Edgerton finished dressing, then scribbled a note to Diana and sent it by the valet:

"Japonette, dear, I'm as rotten at cards as I am dancing. I won't permit indiscreet infatuation to interfere with your bridge. . . . And, by the way, in this sort of a house the chances are they'll play for stakes—probably big stakes. My limit is a cent a point—or was in days of affluence—but our host will scarcely expect us to risk our salaries, I fancy. So even if you have no objection to playing for stakes—which probably, however, you have—you need not feel obliged to. Our duties here do not include losing money to Mr. Rivett's assorted guests, you know. Feel perfectly at liberty to let the table carry you and Silvette.

"Shall I wait and go down with you both?

"J. E."

She read the note; then handed it silently to Silvette, who read it also in silence.

"You see," said Diana, "it's exactly what I told you. He doesn't wish us to play for stakes."

Diana shook her disheveled head, seated herself and wrote a hasty answer, sending it away by the valet, who was waiting outside the door.

"Don't wait for us, we're not hooked up yet. We're quite accustomed to play for stakes, you funny boy, so that need cause you no uneasiness. . . . And please don't forget to ask me, if they dance."

Edgerton stood thinking for a moment before his fireplace after reading the missive, then struck a match and lit the two notes.

Then he went downstairs and into a green and gold drawing-room, where his hostess received him shyly, almost timidly—a small gray-haired woman all over jewels whose thin little hand trembled slightly in his.

A moment later Silvette and Diana entered, slender and youthful, with all the softly flushed charm of 18 and the winning composure of a wider experience than eighteen years can ever lend.

Col. Curmew presently out-flanked Silvette forcing her skillfully into a momentary retreat toward the recess of a window, where he blockaded her and curled his mustache with satisfaction and shot his cuffs and prepared to drive in her outer pickets.

Diana remained in quiet conversation with Mrs. Rivett, the latter shy, witful and ill at ease by turns, the former sweet and deferential, yet all the while composedly taking the measure of the others in the room, and of the room itself, vaguely aware in her apparently smiling preoccupation that she was winning a perplexed and timid heart.

Cocktails were served—unusual ones that had a scent like the original Ricky, that is, the aromatic odor of wild blossoms.

The little gray woman barely tasted hers, with that same inborn instinct, perhaps, that impelled those old-time hostesses in the days when viands and wines sometimes proved fatal.

Then Edgerton relieved her of her scarcely touched glass; took Diana's, too, which was still half full. Mrs. Rivett rose and gave him her arm, to his surprise; Mr. Rivett took in Diana, his son Silvette. The name of Edgerton had counted heavily.

In the dining-room everything was grossly overdone except the cookery.

"It is nice of your to ask us," he said gently. "You have made everything very easy and comfortable for us. My cousins will be down in a few moments, they asked me to come first."

The little gray woman looked up into his pleasant, well-cut face, as though confused; he smiled at her, still retaining her hand.

"My husband has told me who you are," she said. "I didn't expect you to be just like this. . . . You and your cousins are our very welcome and honored guests. . . . Our guests," she repeated almost tremulously, "and none more welcome under our roof."

"It is gracious and kind of you to say so," he said, touched by the simplicity and the mild, faded face upturned.

Then Mr. Rivett came forward, cautiously treading the velvet, his two burned-down eyes fixed behind the big concave eyeglasses.

"It's wet weather," he said, shaking hands. "I hope your quarters are comfortable."

"Most luxurious, thank you—with a beautiful outlook."

Mrs. Rivett's gentle voice sounded at his elbow, presenting him to her daughter and son, and after that to several others who, for the moment, he made no effort to distinguish one from another except that he recognized Col. Curmew in superb form and obstrusive pearl studs decorating a fluted shirt front.

Edgerton let his eyes rest for a moment, outside the silver and crystal circle of light, on gold, heavy carving, gilded tapestry and picture, and withdrew his gaze gravely. Men servants swarmed, bothering him; the scent of greenhouse blossoms, forced before their time; the heavy magnificence out of place—all slightly disgusted him, though much of it was about what he had expected of such people.

Little Miss Rivett, on his left, dissected her terrapin with the healthy attention of youth and hunger; and presently he turned to look at her with amused but wholly amiable curiosity.

He saw a small, plump, dainty maid with exceedingly clear and bright brown eyes; and a softly brilliant complexion, looking back at him with unconceded interest.

There was a moment's silence, then they both smiled.

"Do you think you'll like us?" she asked saucily; "or do you hate us already?"

"Not the slightest doubt of my liking you, Miss Rivett, but how about your liking us?"

"Your cousins are most bewitching and bewildering. You seem to be nice—are you?"

"Very," he said, laughing. "I'm glad you gave me an opportunity of saying so, because otherwise it might not have been perfectly clear to you."

"I am rather fastidious," she said. "How well do you dance?"

"My grace in that praiseworthy pastime is ursine."

"Really?"

"Unbearably."

"You are very British, aren't you?"

"Do you refer to my little play upon words?"

"No, generally; that was merely a touch of local color. Naturally, also, you fish, shoot, ride to hounds and play polo; do you?"

"Also gawf, dear lady."

"Perfectly symmetrical and indistinguishable from others of your kind. I thought so. Crocky too?"

"Certainly, crocky," he admitted, "also no bank account. You may call me m'lud with impunity."

"Perhaps you're not entirely qualified. How do you stand on the heiress question, Mr. Edgerton?"

"I can't qualify there."

"Then you're a sham. Besides, you're neither clever nor gallant. I am an heiress."

"Then I qualify at once as a fortune hunter," he said laughing, "and I'll cable for my solicitors."

"What are you saying?" asked Mrs. Rivett in her gentle, uncertain voice.

"Mother, Mr. Edgerton and I are going to be friends. Perhaps he isn't sure of it, but I am. Tell him what happens when I am sure of anything."

Jack Rivett, rather too plump and smooth, moved into a chair beside Edgerton; and the latter, who had prejudged him from his appearance, was slightly surprised to find the youth widely read, widely traveled, with a mind and even a wit entirely his own, and an original but sometimes callow comment for any subject brought up.

In a desultory conversation it presently transpired that young Rivett was a candidate for the Patroon's Club.

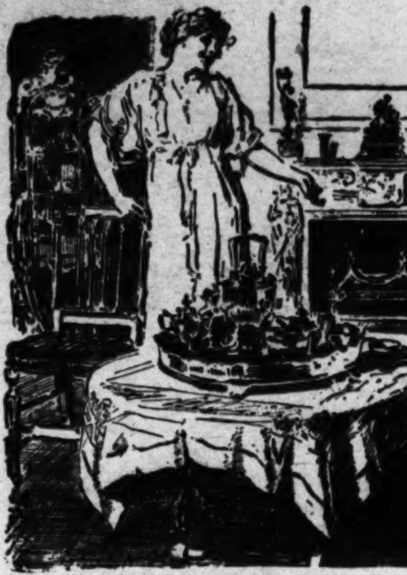
"You're a member I believe; are you not?" he asked Edgerton.

"I have resigned."

"Oh! I thought that was one club from which nobody ever resigned. I beg your pardon, Edgerton!" he added, turning red; "don't think me a cad."

"No offense," smiled Edgerton; "I resigned because I couldn't afford it. It's a good club, hope you make it soon."

"We're rather recent additions," said young Rivett—"if we are additions—to New York. You never can tell what New Yorkers will do to people like us," he added laughingly.



"You see," said Diana, "it's exactly what I high st

"New York is practically composed of recent residents," said Edgerton, smiling.

Col. Curmew came over briskly, expelling smoke.

"What are you youngsters playing this evening? Auction or Chinese Kahn?"

"However they choose to make up the tables," said Jack Rivett lazily. Then, as though on an afterthought: "I doubt whether Mr. Edgerton bothers with cards; do you?"

"I don't mind, except that I've cut out playing for stakes," replied Edgerton, perfectly aware of Jack Rivett's kindly consideration in giving him a chance to escape gracefully.

Diana, Col. Curmew, a very pretty Mrs. Weymss and Mr. Rivett sat together; at another table Silvette, Mr. Snaith, Christine Rivett, and a Mr. Dineen—a gentleman weighing some 200 pounds and wearing an attractive snub nose and a pair of merry gray-blue eyes.

And the awful hush of auction descended without a sound.

Edgerton and his hostess and a Judge Wicklow and a Mrs. Lorrimore—a fair, fat, blue-eyed thing with a cupid-bow mouth as sweet as the smile that abode there—settled themselves to Chinese Kahn, a game spelled in various ways and played in several more.

"Stakes?" inquired Judge Wicklow in the deep, thick voice, celebrated and feared where judicial procedures are thickest and most unimportant.

"Neither Mr. Edgerton nor I care to gamble—I think," said Mrs. Rivett, timidly.

The judge turned his bovine countenance on Edgerton. The only anomaly in it seemed to be his eyebrows. Cows have no eyebrows.

"I'm sorry," said Edgerton.

The judge seemed sorry, too, but he shuffled the two packs in his enormous and hairy hands, dealt and deposited the surplus in a pile with a single card separate and face upward—the ace of hearts.

Mrs. Lorrimore promptly picked it up, and laid down three aces, four fours, a small sequence interiorly made possible by a joker, and sat back triumphantly with her depleted suit in her gemmed fingers, which pressed comfortably to an ample bosom. bosom.

"Discard," rumbled the judge.

Nobody ever wants a nine, somehow.

Frank Coffey—Wise in Lore of Desert

BY GEORGE LAW

IF YOU are interested in anything between the Salton Sea and the Colorado River—minerals, plants, water holes, trails, scenery, old mines, future bonanzas, or anything else that's there to be interested in—the man you want to see is Frank Coffey. When he is not out guiding engineers, scientists or sightseers through the hills, or off with his dog-eared burros on a bit of assessment work, you can find him at Dos Palms, sixteen miles from Mecca, on a road used almost exclusively by people seeking to get in touch with Frank Coffey.

One of Frank's dog-eared burros beside the palms.

Besides the satisfaction of securing clear and accurate information about whatever you want to know, you will be repaid for a visit to Dos Palms by many unusual sights and interesting things of many kinds all along the way. Desert enthusiasm is largely a matter of the time of year. The desert is as changeable as the chameleon that loves its warm rocks and sands. There may be times when its barren solitudes are as grim and sinister as doters on weird adjectives encourage us to believe. A most novel and effective punishment for the convicted criminal or the michievous profiteer would be to deposit him out of an airplane in the dead of summer beside the Chuckawalla Mountains. The desert bodes ill for those that enter it unprepared. Prospectors, desert rats and experienced oldtimers like Frank Coffey, however, are perfectly at home in it any where and any time.

They are even more independent than burros, and I have met chaps of this type who preferred to pack their tools and necessaries on their backs rather than bother with these supposedly resourceful little burden bearers, which drink up in a day and eat up in a week more than they can carry.

In Winter and Spring the Desert Presents a Pageant of Flowers

BUT in the winter and spring the desert is friendly to everybody. After such rains as we have had this year all potential dread and dreariness vanish in meadows of brilliant pink sand verbenas, exquisitely fragrant desert sunflowers, demure primroses and even lovely Easter lilies. The imprisoned gold bursts out of the hills in myriads of yellow encelias. Like topazes and rubies the cactus flowers gleam among the spines. From the bristling yuccas rise stalks of purest coral and pearls. Hardly has the flush of the tender annual wild flowers begun to fade when the queer bushes and scraggly trees flare into bloom. Creosote, smoketree, mesquite, palo verde and a dozen others carry the pageant of flora well on into the ardent summer.

Near Mecca, which you know is nearly 200 feet below sea level, a wide plain of sand inclines eastward toward the corrugated mud hills. Some years ago I snapped a picture there to show the true sandy desolation of parts of the desert. The picture I took this year reveals billows of golden and pink flowers. The road to Dos Palms turns southeast and climbs over ridges and attractive bench lands above the Salton Sea. The flower scheme gradually changes from the low annual to the blooming bush. At length from a last rise the little oasis is visible, a slim bunch of wild palms standing in thickets of mesquite and arrowweed in an extensive bowl. Of course, the proper name is Dos Palms; but somehow or other the rear half got translated in common parlance. The combination, though illegitimate, possesses a savor of individuality rather closely suggestive of the spot. Dos Palms first came into prominence before the building of the Southern Pacific Railroad as a lively way station on the Butterfield stage route. The ruins of the old adobe building are now barely discernable mounds beside the tepid spring. Somewhat later it became a rendesvous of miners. Two institutions run in conjunction, a small smelter and a saloon, kept the gold dust flowing from the hills, out of the ore, down the throats of the miners and into the pockets of the Dos Palms proprietors. Not much of the smelter remains. The tin saloon building, though somewhat perforated with stray bullet holes and much eroded by time, is still standing and affords shelter to prospectors, horse traders and Frank Coffey's celebrated friends in a never-ending succession.

Coffey's hobby is raising dates in the alkali sands of the little Dos Palms ranch.

Every one trekking the sandy wilderness along the east shore of the Salton stops at Dos Palms. It provides a little green feed for the animals, a plentiful supply of warm, slightly saline water, an attractive camping site, and very often a most entertaining host. Though some of Frank's dog-eared burros are always to be found among the rushes and tules, Frank himself has so many claims, and is so much in demand, that he is frequently away. But he knows about everything that goes on in or near the exsaloon of Dos Palms. If campers slip by without his seeing them, he reads in the vestiges of their fare and their hoofprints or wheel tracks what sort of people they were, which way they were going and what they were about.

Covers Child's Grave With Mosaic of Colored Stones

ONE time when Frank returned he stumbled across a touching sight, something that rubbed through the nonchalance of the derelict life. It was a little grave recently made. But it was a hasty work and Frank hesitated to think what sort of a coffin had been devised. For a marker there was a piece of cardboard box on a stick. In pencil was unskillfully printed: "Baby White, born Dec. 15, 1915; died Jan. 15, 1916." That was more than Frank Coffey could go. Collecting his brightest specimens of garnet, tourmaline and quartz crystal he laid over the grave a mosaic of glistening many-colored stones. For a headpiece he took a fine large slab, a choice piece of talc from one of his claims, and upon this he engraved the sad legend of that fleeting little spirit at Dos Palms. Should the parents of Baby White chance to read these words, let them feel consoled in the knowledge that the resting place of their little one is neither forgotten nor neglected. Whenever the flowers bloom bouquets are placed there by the rough hands of a tenderly thoughtful man.

Dos Palms and the ex-saloon. The tin is perforated with bullet holes.

Frank told me of a gardening experiment undertaken at Dos Palms by some Italians after the days of the saloon. With visions of a vine hedged villa the Italians dug a trench around a block of land and directed the flow of the spring into the excavation. Their idea, Frank said, was to subirrigate the land. On the sloping ground through which the overflow trickles, more vines and plants were set out. Did they prosper? No, emphatically no—Frank answered his own question and poked me unequivocally in the ribs. Do you know why No; well, if you'll dig eighteen inches down you will strike a stratum of pure salt as thick as a cement pavement. Of course the grapes wouldn't grow. The land is worthless.

Frank's rib-poking method of advancing his argument is likely to prove disconcerting to a person unprepared for it. One has the sheepish feeling of being carried off one's feet unreasonably. It is a case in which avoirdupois is a distinct dialectical asset. Last winter a young desert explorer from the East found discourse with Frank Coffey accompanied by so much gymnastic discomfort, that finally, after losing his balance a number of times and narrowly escaping the camp fire, he carelessly picked up a stick and folded it under his arms with the end protruding in the direction of the enthusiastic talker!

This Desert Savant is Guide, Philosopher and Friend to All

COFFEY lives about a half mile from the palms in an attractive little cottage shaded by tall cottonwood trees. The most noticeable objects in the yard are a dismantled automobile, picks, pans, shovels and odds and ends of prospectors' paraphernalia. So littered up is the porch with samples of ore that one hardly considers the possibility of entering the house. However, a glance inside reveals an interior similarly cluttered up, there being barely leeway for one person to navigate from doorway to bed, to stove, table and out again. But there is no occasion to enter. The desert is pre-eminently and always a land of the out of doors. Across a fence is a small garden showing considerable promise in a dozen date palms. The water from the Dos Palms spring finds its way down to be directed, upon occasion, by Frank into the irrigating basins. For domestic uses he has a well—much better drinking water than that of the spring, though plainly saline. Plenty of alkali shows in the sand. Across the fence the uncleared ground is white with it. Frank possesses also several rows of nursery date palms which he has grown from seed. Of course, half of these are pretty certain to prove unproductive males, and of the other half not many are likely to bear dates of any account. But there is always a chance of getting sport palms producing a superior grade of date. Of the twelve trees in the garden some are excellent varieties—Deglet Noor, Saidy. They are still too young to bear heavily, but when they do, at the rate of 200 and 300 pounds per palm of dates worth $1 a pound, Frank will not have to go back to the diggings unless he hankers to.

But this attractive little ranch is not Frank's fee simple property. It is his to live upon and enjoy through the courtesy of his friend, the owner, too wealthy to be more than casually aware of his Dos Palms real estate. The ranch makes a first rate headquarters for Frank, an assembling place for ore samples from all parts of the great fascinating desert. Here the streams of prominent people who are always writing him and looking for him can find him, except, of course, when he is away on assessment.

He is Wise to All the Secrets of the Sand Wastes

THE public is vaguely aware that surveys of various kinds are continually being made in the desert. All sorts of development, reclamation, unlocking of mineral wealth and other projects or schemes are afoot. One time it is a high-line canal from Imperial. The surveyors waste a lot of time trying to locate the canal where it does not belong, until finally, in desperation, they come to Frank Coffey. He marches them around the edge of the hills on the old beach line. Just the place, of course, if they'd only known about it. (Punch!) Along comes some railroad surveyors. They want to go north from Niland across the lowest practicable pass in the mountains. Some one has put them wise, so without monkeying around they ask Frank Coffey where the line should go, and he tells them. He tells

HIS LAST BOW

BY SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE

"Very good, Martha. I will look into them tomorrow. Goodnight. These papers," he continued, as the old lady vanished, "are not of very great importance for, of course, the information which they represent has been sent off long ago to the German government. These are the originals which could not safely be got out of the country."

"Then they are of no use?"

"I should not go so far as to say that, Watson. They will at least show our people what is known and what is not. I may say that a good many of these papers have come through me, and I need not add are thoroughly untrustworthy. It would brighten my declining years to see a German cruiser navigating the Solent according to the minefield plans which I have furnished. But you, Watson," he stopped his work and took his old friend by the shoulders, "I've hardly seen you in the light yet. How have the years used you? You look the same blithe boy as ever."

"I feel twenty years younger, Holmes. I have seldom felt so happy as when I got your wire asking me to meet you at Harwich with the car. But you, Holmes—you have changed very little—save for that horrible goatee."

"These are the sacrifices one makes for one's country, Watson," pulling at his little tuft. "Tomorrow it will be but a dreadful memory. With my hair cut and a few other superficial changes I shall no doubt reappear at Claridge's tomorrow as I was before this American stunt—I beg your pardon, Watson, my well of English seems to be permanently defiled—before this American job came my way."

"But you had retired, Holmes. We heard of you as living the life of a hermit among your bees and your books in a small farm down upon the South Downs."

"Exactly, Watson. Here is the fruit of my leisurer ease, the magnum opus of my latter years!" He picked up the volume from the table and read out the title, "Practical Handbook of Bee Culture, with some Observations upon the Segregation of the Queen. Alone I did it. Behold the fruit of pensive nights and laborious days, when I watched the little working gangs as once I watched the criminal world of London."

"But how did you get to work again?"

"Ah, I have often marveled at it myself. The Foreign Minister alone I could have withstood, but when the Pemier also deigned to visit my humble roof—! The fact is, Watson, that this gentleman upon the sofa was a bit too good for our people. He was in a class by himself. Things were going wrong, and no one could understand why they were going wrong. Agents were suspected or even caught, but there was evidence of some strong and secret central force. It was absolutely necessary to expose it. Strong pressure was brought upon me to look into the matter. It has cost me two years, Watson, but they have not been devoid of excitement. When I say that I started my pilgrimage at Chicago, graduated in an Irish secret society at Buffalo, gave serious trouble to the constabulary at Skibbareen and so eventually caught the eye of a subordinate agent of Von Bork, who recommended me as a likely man, you will realize that the matter was complex. Since then I have been honored by his confidence, which has not prevented most of his plans going subtly wrong and five of his best agents being in prison. I watched them, Watson, and I picked them as they ripened. Well, sir, I hope that you are none the worse!"

The last remark was addressed to Von Bork himself, who after much gasping and blinking had lain quietly listening to Holmes's statement.

"Though unmusical, German is the most expressive of all languages," he observed, when Von Bork had stopped from pure exhaustion. "Hullo! Hullo!" he added, as he looked hard at the corner of a tracing before putting it in the box. "This should put another bird in the cage. I had no idea that the paymaster was such a rascal, though I have long had an eye upon him. Mister Von Bork, you have a great deal to answer for."

"I shall get level with you, Altamont," he said, speaking with slow deliberation, "if it takes me all my life I shall get level with you!"

"The old sweet song," said Holmes. "How often have I heard it in days gone by. It was a favorite ditty of the late lamented Prof. Moriarty. Col. Sebastian Moran has also been known to warble it. And yet I live and keep bees upon the South Downs."

"Curse you, you double traitor!" cried the German, straining against his bonds and glaring murder from his furious eyes.

"No, no, it is not so bad as that," said Holmes, smiling. "As my speech surely shows you, Mr. Altamont of Chicago had no existence in fact. I used him and he is gone."

"Then who are you?"

"It is really immaterial who I am, but since the matter seems to interest you, Mr. Von Bork, I may say that this is not my first acquaintance with the members of your family. I have done a good deal of business Van Bork groaned and sank on the sofa. probably familiar to you."

"I would wish to know it," said the Prussian grimly.

"It was I who brought about the separation between Irene Adler and the late King of Bohemia when your cousin Heinrich was the Imperial Envoy. It was I who saved from murder, by the Nihilist Klopman, Count Von and Zu Graenstein, who was your mother's elder brother. It was I—"

"There is only one man," he cried.

"Exactly," said Holmes.

Van Bork groaned and sank on the sofa. "And most of that information came through you," he cried. "What is it worth? What have I done? It is my ruin forever!"

"It is certainly a little untrustworthy," said Holmes. "It will require some checking and you have little time to check it. Your admiral may find the new guns rather larger than he expects, and the cruisers perhaps a trifle faster."

"There are a good many other points of detail which will, no doubt, come to light in good time. But you have one quality which is very rare in a German, Mr. Von Bork; you are a sportsman and you will bear me no ill-will when you realize that you, who have outwitted so many other people, have at last been outwitted yourself. After all, you have done your best for your country, and I have done my best for mine, and what could be more natural? Besides," he added, not unkindly, as he laid his hand upon the shoulder of the prostrate man, "it is better than to fall before some more ignoble foe. These papers are now ready, Watson. If you will help me with our prisoner, I think that we may get started for London at once."

"I trust you are as comfortable as circumstances will permit," said Holmes, when the final arrangements were made. "Should I be guilty of a liberty if I lit a cigar and placed it between your lips?"

"I suppose you realize, Mr. Sherlock Holmes," said he, "that if your government bears you out in this treatment it becomes an act of war?"

"What about your government and all this treatment?" said Holmes, tapping the valise.

"You are a private individual. You have no warrant for my arrest. The whole proceeding is absolutely illegal and outrageous."

"Absoltuely," said Holmes.

"Kidnaping a German subject."

"And stealing his private papers."

"Well, you realize your position, you and your accomplice here. If I were to shout for help as we pass through the village—"

"My dear sir, if you did anything so foolish you would probably enlarge the two limited titles of our village inns by giving us 'The Dangling Prussian' as a signpost. The Englishman is a patient creature, but at present his temper is little inflamed and it would be as well not to try him too far. No, Mr. Von Bork, you will go with us in a quiet, sensible fashion to Scotland Yard, whence you can send for your friend, Baron Von Herling, and see if even now you may not fill that place which he has reserved for you in the ambassadorial suite. As to you, Watson, you are joining us with your old service, as I understand, so London won't be out of your way. Stand with me here upon the terrace for it may be the last quiet talk that we shall ever have."

"There's an east wind blowing, Watson."

"I think not, Holmes. It is very warm."

"Good old Watson! You are the one fixed point in a changing age. There's an east wind coming all the same, such a wind as never blew on England yet. It will be cold and bitter, Watson, and a good many of us may wither before its blast. But it's God's own wind none the less, and a cleaner, better, stronger land will lie in the sunshine when the storm has cleared. Start her up, Watson, for it's time that we were on our

Wonderful Engineering

The Zambesi bridge in Africa was built across a chasm 420 feet below. Half of the parts were first sent across by cable. When all was ready 100 native laborers under twenty-five engineers were set to work building the bridge from the two sides of the gorge simultaneously. The work was begun in October, 1904, and was finished in nineteen weeks, perhaps the quickest piece of bridge-building on record. As the bridge neared completion, there was much excitement, for the least mistake would have been serious, but the two halves met exactly. There had not been a miscalculation of one-eighth of an inch. Lions and other wild animals were sources of terror to the force. On one occasion a full-grown male lion, roused from his nap by the sound of an engine's whistle, dashed at the engine and tried to claw it. It charged the engine again and again until finally the engineer rushed his iron steed at the lion and killed it. The coming of the railroad has not driven out the wild life; a trip there now means seeing a hundred zoos from the car window.

A Chinese Porcelain Fad

Among the closing acts of Lillian Russell's life was the preparation of her reminiscences appearing in the Cosmopolitan. The August installment deals with "Pals, Porcelains, Pullmans and Pets." Next to her family, of whom she wrote with deepest affection, Blanche Bates was most dear to her. Her special pets were Japanese spaniels, while she could seldom resist buying fine Chinese porcelain. An old priest of San Jose offered Miss Russell two porcelain figures for $5 and was most grateful when she tendered him $20. Much to her surprise, these porcelains were afterward appraised at $1000 each.—[Portland Oregonian.

Teddy Bear's Mother Lives

All the world knows the Teddy Bear and will be interested to know that Teddy Bear's mother, the old woman who invented him, is still alive and that she celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday the other day. Teddy Bear's mother is called so by all who knew her and she is quite proud of the title. Really she is Fraulein Gretle Siteff, a crippled woman, and a native of Giengen, away in Swabia, a part of Southern Germany.—[New York Times.

Marvels of Science

Among the most remarkable glimpses into hidden corners of nature that scientific advance has afforded are the frequent discoveries of micro-organisms in unexpected places, where they produce phenomena heretofore supposed to rise from other causes. For instance, a scientist in Upsala, Sweden, ascertained that in preparation of meat and fish containing, for purposes of preservation, salt to the amount of 15 per cent, micro-organisms grow luxuriantly, and he concludes that the flavors and odors that are peculiar to various salt conserves are due to the micro-organisms with which they are crowded.—[Indianapolis News.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

Warren is Caustically Unsympathetic Over His Sister's Tragic Loss.

"BOBBY, you mustn't do that! You'll ruin Aunt Helen's nice floor. It's just been waxed. Now look at those marks!"

With impish defiance Bobby took a final running slide—his heels leaving disfiguring streaks on the polished floor.

"Why don't you play with your crayons?" persisted Helen. "I thought you were going to draw me a house."

"I'm hungry! When you goin' to have dinner?" scrambling up on the piano bench.

"In just a little while, now. But it's not dinner—we have supper Sunday evenings."

"Here, can that racket!" Warren glowered over his paper as Bobby ran a pencil aolng the piano keys. "Where's Carrie? Why don't she look after this youngster?"

"She has a headache—she went in my room to lie down."

Wearily Helen stopped to gather up the scattered crayons. One had been stepped on and ground into the rug.

All day she had been picking up after Bobby. How she dreaded these Sunday visits of Warren's sister and her incorrigible child.

"Helen, didn't you find something of mine in the bathroom?" Carrie, flushed and flustered, appeared at the door.

"Why no, what was it? Not your rings?"

"No, it—something else I left on the washstand. Maybe Nora found it—I'll ask her," hurrying out to the kitchen.

"What'd she lose?" Warren reached for another paper.

"She didn't say," Helen was turning down the rugs Bobby had kicked up.

A moment later Carrie dashed back, her anxiety unabated.

"Bobby, have you been in the bathroom? Did you see anything that belonged to mother on the washstand?"

"I ain't seen nothing," trying to dislodge Pussy Purr-Mew from her refuge under the couch.

"What'd you lose?" demanded Warren. "Why all the mystery?"

"Well, it's—it's my bridge, if you must know!" reddening.

"Your bridge?"

"My removable bridge. It hurt me so I took it out before I lay down."

"Oh, your false teeth," he grinned. "Why in blazes didn't you say so?"

"They're no more false than that bridge you have," bristled his sister. "But they're more sanitary. I can take them out and wash them—just two teeth with a gold band. I'm positive I left them in the bathroom!"

"Well, we haven't swiped 'em. I'm pretty well satisfied with the kind that stays in."

"You needn't joke about it," hotly. "They cost $60 and now if they've been knocked off and broken—"

"Where'd you have 'em last? Maybe you sneezed 'em out."

"You sure you left them in the bathroom?" asked Helen ignoring Warren's irrelevancy. "Maybe you had them on the dresser. Wait, I'll come help you look."

But a thorough search of Helen's room and the bathroom failed to reveal Carrie's missing teeth.

"You sure you had them? You know they don't show unless you laugh—you might have left them at home."

"I might—but I didn't!" snapped Carrie. "Don't you suppose I know whether I had them or not? They hurt me in the car as we drove in. Heavens, the dust back of this dresser! Don't you ever move it out?"

"Not every week," flushed Helen. "One of the legs is wobbly."

"That's your antique furniture—always coming to pieces! Thank goodness, I haven't the craze for such junk—wouldn't have it as a gracious gift!"

"Well, Carrie, criticizing my furniture won't help find your teeth. Did you take them out before you lay down? Could they be anywhere about this couch?"

"You can look," ungraciously. "But I know I left them in the bathroom."

"What's happened now?" dismayed Helen at the sudden turmoil from the library.

"Look what that brat did!" roared Warren as they rushed in.

"Aunt Helen said draw a picture of a house," whimpered Bobby.

On the white enameled baseboard was a blue-crayoned house, the red chimney and black curling smoke extending up on the wall paper.

"The woodwork can be washed—but it'll never come off the paper," wailed Helen.

"Nonsense! Just rub it with a piece of bread," instructed Carrie. "I took it off our dining-room that way."

"If you'd given him a good thrashing then," exploded Warren, "he wouldn't have done it again."

"He didn't mean to be naughty, did you Precious?" defended his mother, straightening his sailor collar. "His Aunt Helen told him to draw a house."

Returning from the pantry with a piece of bread, Helen anxiously attempted to erase the chimney. Only part of it came off, leaving an ugly smudge.

"That'll never be seen," shrugged Carrie. "Just move the couch a little—that'll hide it."

"Carrie, I think the least you can do when you bring Bobby here, is to keep him from being destructive."

"What's them?" demanded Bobby.

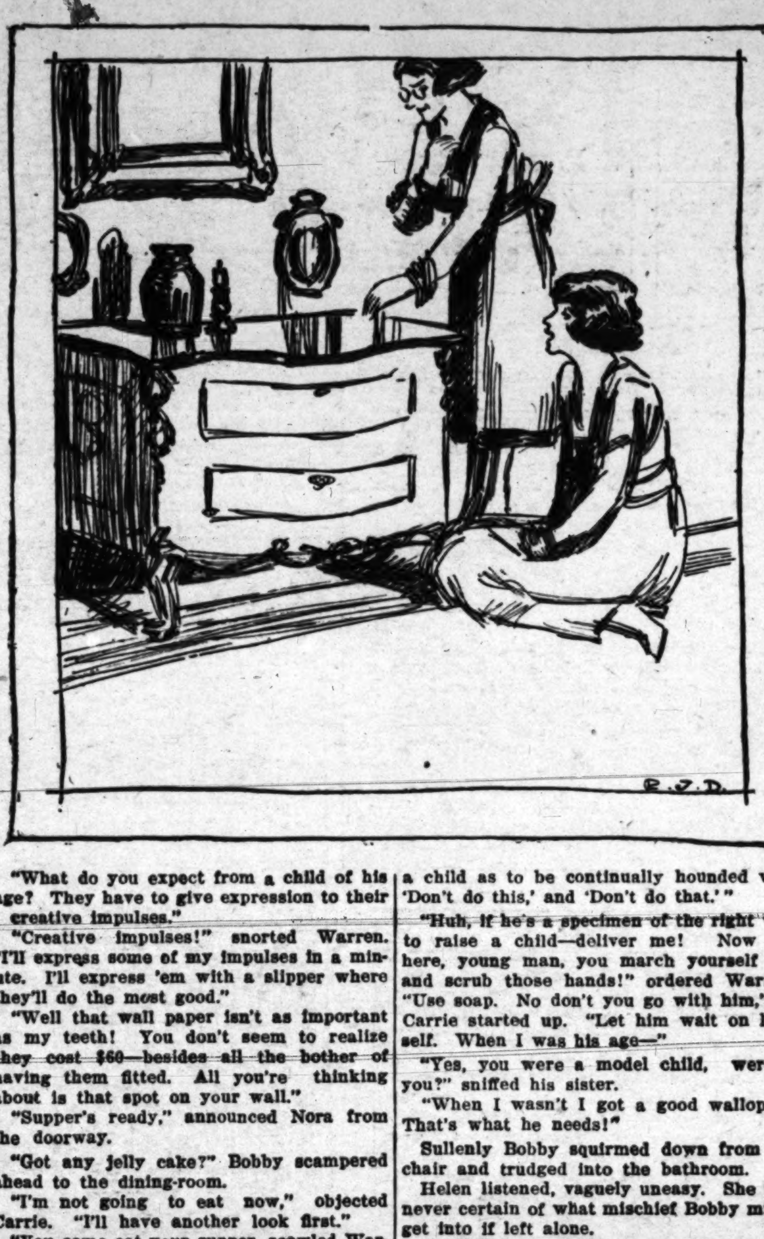
"Tomato preserves," Helen adjusted the tray cloth under his plate. "But you must have your bread and milk first."

"No, not that piece," objected Carrie sharply as Warren helped her to the cold ham. "You know I never eat any fat. No, Bobby, you can't have that now. Here, let mother butter your bread."

The air charged with discord, the excellence of the cold ham, salad and hot tea rolls was unappreciated.

"Oh, Bobby, don't wipe your hands on the nice clean tablecloth. Oh, what dirty hands! You ought never come to the table without washing."

"Helen, you're always nagging at him," resented Carrie. "You don't give him a minute's peace. There's nothing so bad for a child as to be continually hounded with 'Don't do this,' and 'Don't do that.'"



"What do you expect from a child of his age? They have to give expression to their creative impulses."

"Creative impulses!" snorted Warren. "I'll express some of my impulses in a minute. I'll express 'em with a slipper where they'll do the most good."

"Well that wall paper isn't as important as my teeth! You don't seem to realize they cost $60—besides all the bother of having them fitted. All you're thinking about is that spot on your wall."

"Supper's ready," announced Nora from the doorway.

"Got any jelly cake?" Bobby scampered ahead to the dining-room.

"I'm not going to eat now," objected Carrie. "I'll have another look first."

"You come eat your supper, scowled Warren, always impatient at having a meal delayed. "You can look afterwards."

"One can't lay a thing down here that it doesn't vanish. Last time I lost my fountain pen—and never did find it."

"Well, nobody's going to snitch your false teeth, Carrie. We're all supplied with the kind that stay in. Ha-ha, even Pussy Purr-Mew can prove an alibi," as a pink-mouthed yawn exposed a full set of feline teeth.

"That's right—make all the cynical remarks you can. If I must have bridged teeth, I prefer to have them sanitary—so I can take them out and clean them."

"What if you should swallow 'em? Be a pretty expensive meal. What d'you do with 'em at night? Put 'em in a glass of water by the bed? Well, if it's all the same to you, I'd rather have my $60 anchored in."

"We'll look again after supper," propitiated Helen as Carrie, glaring at her brother, flung into her chair at the table. "I don't like to make Nora late—she wants to get off this evening."

"I suppose Nora's getting off is more important than anything else," was Carrie's acid remark as she shook out her napkin.

"Huh, if he's a specimen of the right way to raise a child—deliver me! Now see here, young man, you march yourself out and scrub those hands!" ordered Warren. "Use soap. No don't you go with him," as Carrie started up. "Let him wait on himself. When I was his age—"

"Yes, you were a model child, weren't you?" sniffed his sister.

"When I wasn't I got a good walloping. That's what he needs!"

Sullenly Bobby squirmed down from his chair and trudged into the bathroom.

Helen listened, vaguely uneasy. She was never certain of what mischief Bobby might get into if left alone.

"Look! Look what I found!" He dashed back holding up a towel.

"Oh, my—my teeth!" gasped Carrie, snatching the towel. "I left them on the washstand—and they caught on this fringe!"

"Might've caught on anything," grunted Warren. "Why the Sam Hill don't you have 'em fastened in your head. Then you know where they are. You're too blamed careless to have detachable teeth. Now stick 'em in—and come finish your supper."

"I don't see anything humorous about it," glared Carrie. "It's very poor taste to make a joke of everything," flouncing into the bathroom to replace her dental accessories.

"Dear, don't tease her—don't say anything more," urged Helen. "She's furious already."

But when his sister swished haughtily back to the table, her flushed face freshly powdered, Warren sliced another wedge of ham which he deposited on her plate.

"Now you've got your full set of grinders—guess you can make away with that. But you take my tip and have 'em riveted in. May not be so sanitary, but it's a durn sight safer. You won't be losing 'em all over the place—keeping the whole family in an uproar hunting for your blooming molars!"

Master Craftsman and Poet

William Morris, poet and art-worker, began his literary career in 1856 with the publication of "The Defense of Guinevere," a series of lyrics, mediaval in inspiration and in color. It is his English versions of Scandinavian Sagos that gave him widest fame. Some of these are "The Story of Sigurd the Volsung," "The Fall of the Niblungs" and "The Earthly Paradise."

During his prime few men in England had a more wide spread influence than he. Besides his position as a poet, he was an art critic and the producer of many distinctive works of art. Then, too, he was a socialist and at his home at Hemmersmith on the Thames, which was filled with art treasures, was famous as the center of radical thought. Here leaders of the socialist movement were entertained, sometimes for long periods at a stretch. Thus a considerable number of pamphlets and other writings enamated from Hemmersmith.

Near Hemmersmith was the Kelscott Press, which held his interest in his later years. From it he issued reprints of early English authors, exquisite productions that well exemplify Morris's ideas in art.

The production of wonderful examples of the book-making art was only one of the ways in which Morris found expression for his love of the beautiful. In 1863 he founded, along with Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti and Ford Madox Brown, an establishment for the production of stained glass, mosaic tiles, fabrics and wall coverings, intended to make over public taste in color and design. The influence of the products of this unique establishment has been wide spread, as Morris through this work built up a large following and attained the greatest fame.

Columbia University has received from Dr. H. H. Rusby, now exploring the Bolivian jungles, the photograph of a cactus with a limb spread of 40 feet; it is probably the largest true cactus in the world. The Bopi river region has yielded many interesting specimens, among them the "tree of life" used by the natives for medicinal purposes. —[Scientific American.

THE HOW IN HOUSES

HOW TO PLAN HOW TO BUY HOW TO SAVE

THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF HOUSE FURNISHING

THE question is asked as to what are the fundamental principles of house furnishing. Many answers may be made to this question, but perhaps Whistler's definitions in regard to decorative art is best. He said: "The fundamental principles of decorative art as in all art are based on laws as exact as those known to science, and can be gotten only by laws of balance, proportion, repose and harmony. Then he adds: "Art is a science,—the science by which the artist picks, chooses and groups, that beauty may result. The artist can leave no more to chance than can the chemist, the botanist, or the biologist."

Within certain limitations a house may be furnished in accordance with these ideas, difficult and even absurd as it may seem. The factor that makes the application of principles and rules seem difficult in house furnishing is the personal element, the fact that a home is properly planned for a definite group of persons, each with peculiarities, individual tastes and special needs. Barring these, the furnishing of a home permits the practical application of the principles laid down by Whistler and other authorities.

The Laws of Balance, Proportion, Repose and Harmony Are Fundamental

THOSE three words "picks, chooses and groups" are important. Unless intelligent selection of house and of furniture is made, results are doubtful; without expert grouping of the objects admitted to each room, only a hodge-podge will be produced even from the best of selection. This grouping of furniture and of accessories all depends upon the laws of balance, proportion, repose and harmony, which Whistler lays down as the fundamental principles.

Balance was discussed in the article that appeared two weeks ago. It has to do largely with arrangement. Through it colors are blocked in to offset each other, forms that balance each other are used so as to give the effect of equivalence—so that no one object or group stands out as remote, isolated, related to nothing else. Balance is attained by so placing objects that the general effect is one of equilibrium. The lack of balance is apparent when the heavy or large objects are all placed at one end of a room. This gives the effect of tipping, as though the floor was on a slant, borne down by the greater weight at one end. In its simplest meaning, balance is attained by placing objects of about the same size and effect on the two sides of any central object. In practice, a less formal balance is obtained by allowing a table on one side of a central object to balance a chair on the other, or by so placing a vase on a mantel that it balances a piece of carving or other unlike object on the other side. The balance is more definite and usually more pleasing when there is a central object placed between the two that directly balance each other. In that case, the size of the balanced objects determines their distance from the center, the smaller object being at the greater distance.

Spaces as well as objects are balanced; so are colors and patches of light and dark. One's feeling for harmony is the best guide here.

How an Effect of Proportion May Be Achieved

THE second principle enumerated by Whistler is proportion. The width of a room compared with its length is one of the first questions involving proportion. Then the width and length compared with the height comes in. Unless these are well related, the proportions are bad. Something can be done to overcome this. If the ceilings are too low for the size of the room, the removal of picture moldings and the use of striped paper without a border will add to the apparent height of the room. So will the use of long straight curtains, hung as high as possible and extending nearly to the floor. Vertical paneling placed quite closely together is another device that seems to add height. High-backed chairs, tall and rather narrow cabinets, panel mirrors and pictures all help wonderfully in seeming to shove the ceiling farther up.

If the other extreme is met with, and the ceilings are unduly high, giving a cold and cheerless effect, certain offsets are possible. Here the unpopular picture molding may be retained. In extreme cases, a wide bordered paper may be used, with a horizontal molding or paneling at the lower edge. This cutting of the walls by horizontal lines is usually undesirable, but at times it may be necessary to do it. Paper with a rather large though obscure design in two tones frequently helps to make one forget the height of ceilings that threaten to spoil a room. Here, if ever, looped up curtains may be used, though on general principles every decorator will warn you against these.

Still discussing that question of proportion in its fundamental relation to the size of a room, certain devices are possible to add to the apparent width or length or to detract from these. If a room is very long and narrow, the placing of the rugs and furniture becomes doubly important. The use of two nearly square rugs instead of one long and narrow one is, of course, advisable. Small rugs, if any are used, should be placed crosswise of the room. Long pieces of furniture, such as a library table or a davenport, should be athwart the room.

In the placing of furniture, without special regard to the proportions of the room, the laws of proportion are observed when objects are balanced. In selecting furniture, proportion comes in and forbids admitting pieces that are too dissimilar in size, style or shape.

The Secret of Harmony is an Underlying Similarity

HARMONY is a subtle principle, easily recognized when achieved, but not so easily explained. The secret of harmony is similarity. However dissimilar harmonious objects may seem to be, there is a thread of similarity that somewhere binds them together. Too much variety, too striking contrasts destroy harmony. Too many colors, too many kinds of fabrics, too many types of furniture, the combination of several kinds of woods—any of these destroy the harmony that is so essential to the creation of beauty.

Repose is the effect produced by enlightened selection and arrangement. When everything seems to belong together, when there is no discordant note produced by the introduction of a color that shrieks at the other colors used, when the furniture is all of the same general type, and when it is arranged in well balanced groups, when the room has proportion, balance and harmony, it has repose.

When this is the case we find a new element entering into the finished picture that is the successful room. This may be called rhythm. This is the result of the lines of the furniture being in accord, the color of rug and cushion and curtain being related without being identical, the pieces of furniture being placed properly in relation to each other and of other and less easily described conditions. A room that is in rhythm has charm. And who can define charm? It is something that is altogether pleasing, that has fascination, that stirs the senses pleasurably, that satisfies the innate craving for beauty.

When the proportion, harmony, balance, rhythm, charm that have been discussed prevail throughout the house and bind it together into an entity, then the creator of this perfect whole may feel satisfied, with one proviso. And that is, if it satisfies and caters to the comfort of the persons who are to live in the house. For a home is a place to be lived in, to enjoy; it is the one place on earth where each person should feel that he or she belongs. Unless it has the individual appeal to each member of the family, something is wrong, and steps must be taken to right it.

At Least One Unifying Principle is Necessary Throughout

TO CREATE a feeling of unity in the home does not mean to make each room resemble the others. There may be wide diversity of color, of wood selected for the furniture, even of wall covering and woodwork, and still be unity throughout. The unifying principle may be in the repetition of one color as the keynote for each room or even as one of the notes that go to make up the whole; it may be in the prevalence of one type of furniture, with similar shape, though perhaps of varied woods; it may be in the choosing of the same neutral background for the walls of all the rooms or in the selection of curtains of the same color to be hung in the same way throughout. Undoubtedly, the feature that is most certain to produce unity is to have wall covering alike in color if not in pattern and texture in the various main rooms, with woodwork alike. Monotony is easily avoided. In one room panels may be used, in another borders on the wall paper, in the third narrow lines may mark off the panels in doors and windows. With the difference in furniture of living room, library, dining room and bedroom, there is little fear of producing monotony by uniform walls and woodwork. Even with window drapes of the same material and color, the diversity of rugs, of cushions, of upholstery material, of accented notes of color and of the pieces of furniture themselves is sufficient to assure the diversity desirable.

And it is better to risk a little monotony than to create the chaos of rooms so out of tune one with another as to spoil the individual beauty of each. It is not difficult to banish monotony. Brilliant orange accessories in one room, with jade green or violet accessories in another, and rose in another make an astonishing difference. Different flowers in the various rooms give individuality. Pictures of altogether different styles, with frames to suit, are helpful in breaking up a too great similarity in rooms. Lamps of different types also help, as do cushions and table covers and mirrors and a multitude of little things that naturally find their way into the rooms where they seem to belong.

In fact, the difficulty is to keep things from accumulating at such a rate that each room seems packed from the beginning—a condition that precludes the harmony and balance and repose and rhythm that the conscientious home maker has been striving to produce.

Side Lights

COLOR SCHEME FOR A DINING ROOM

A pleasing dining room may be evolved by using the rug as the main interest and keying the rest of the furnishings to it. A rug in an oriental pattern of old rose and black on a deep blue ground would make an interior of unusual distinction. Old blue silk hangings at the windows over gold gauze glass curtains, walls done in a warm tan, walnut furniture with chair seats covered in rose and cream damask would serve to bring out and intensify the rich coloring and design of the rug. This type of floor covering would successfully withstand the wear demanded of it.

In the same manner a tiny dining room or breakfast room can be made interesting and charming by the use of a delicately figured rug. In small interiors it is wise to keep the pattern in rugs and fabrics more or less in key with the size of the room but there is no reason why an interior should refrain from all hope of interest just because it is not large. It would be interesting to experiment with a small room, using a paper of soft grays and greens. This would serve to push out the walls and give a sense of space. The woodwork might be painted a gray-green with a rug in a Serge bend pattern. This is a delightful shade of old rose and has a regular all-over figure slightly darker, just enough of a design to make it interesting and yet one that gives the effect of a plain rug. It makes an ideal floor covering for a small room.

GIVE THOUGHT TO THE KITCHEN

The treatment of the walls, floors and ceiling of a kitchen is quite as important as any question pertaining to the drawing room. Painted walls and ceilings are next best to tile, though there is a hard-finished plaster that is enameled and so becomes almost as sanitary and nonabsorbent as tile. Good smooth floors covered with the best grade of linoleum, cemented to the floor, is a highly satisfactory floor, preferred by many to a tiled floor, which is cold and slippery.

A CENTER OF INTEREST

A room may be successfully arranged about some central object as a center of interest. In a living room the fireplace is easily and naturally made that central object. If preferred, a beautiful piece of furniture, such as a fine cabinet or a high boy may be given the position of prominence. A fine picture, a window affording a delightful view, or open door book shelves filled with enticing books may serve as the pivot about which the interest revolves.

SEEK THE COLOR SCHEME

Color schemes may be derived from studying a beautiful piece of tapestry, of chintz or of other figured material. Such combinations as rose and green and brown, as blue and rose and gray, as purple and lavender and pink are successfully worked out in such materials.

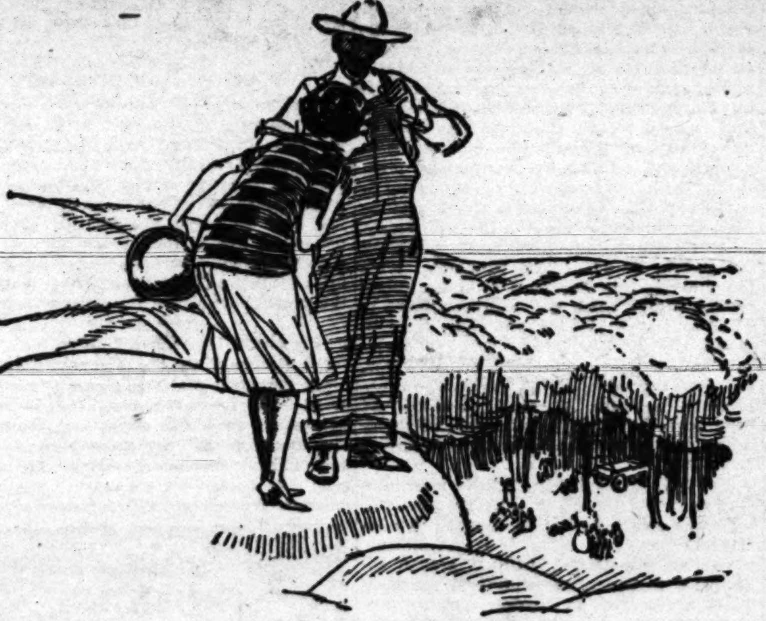
PROLOGUE

One of the favorite outdoor sports of our all too human race is the family reunion . . . a peculiarly human institution for which there is no analogy among other forms of animal life . . . is it born of man's pride in his fecundity? . . . surely a doubtful domain for pride where every Airedale is his equal and every jackrabbit his superior . . . could it stem from a subconscious desire to determine if relatives in the aggregate can possibly be as unsocial as they are in small units? . . . certainly it is not a manifestation of the huddling instinct which accounts for Elks and Rotary clubs and other groups of individuals with similar tastes, for relatives are notoriously dissimilar in this respect . . . we hazard the family reunion is a vestigial remainder of the old clan days and that each reunion is conceived with imagined rosy colored qualities of the relatives in mind rather than those actual prosaic traits which soon become apparent when they are gathered together once more.

Scene I—On the Wagon

In honor of the Potters, who are visiting with Grandma in the country, a family reunion and picnic have been planned . . . all the aunts and uncles and cousins to the first, second, third, and fourth powers are coming . . . the countryside is full of them, for they have always had a great faith in that scriptural injunction which says "Increase and multiply and fill the earth," and, supplementing this, they have not neglected that other passage which reads, "Faith without good works is dead" . . . and now as the curtain goes up we can see them all making merry on their way to Lawrence Falls . . . a long line of two horse wagons filled with straw and cousins and uncles and aunts rattling over the hills, past Hogjaw Bend, through Moccasin Gap, to the place where they never heard of calories and vitamines but get along nicely, thank you, on cornbread, buttermilk, turnip greens, hog-jaw, and hominy.



Off they go up the rocks.

GRANDMA (gazing dubiously at enormous picnic basket full of fried chicken and fixings:) D'ye think we've got enough there for this wagonload?

MA (still figuring on city appetites:) My land, you've enough to feed an army.

BILL (whose breakfast is being rapidly jolted down:) I betcha I'll eat half of it myself.

MAMIE (scornfully:) Pig!

BILL (snappily:) Pig, yourself. The way you ate up all the corn at dinner yesterday! You missed your vocation. You should have been a horse.

MAMIE (as the wagon goes down into vicious chug hole:) Oof! (To Bill:) At least I can eat corn without getting my ears all buttered.

BILL (another chug hole:) Ouch! (To Mamie:) You would if it wasn't you wear your hair over them. You eat corn like I used to play a mouth organ.

PA (who has forgotten the days he used to ride a mower:) Gosh, this seat's hard. Watta road! Oof!

(The Potters are now getting into a country where a road is good so long as you can ride a mule to town . . . steep clay hills, rocks, chug holes, washouts . . . a sharp ridge in the middle like a razorback and a rut on each side in which you could hide a hog . . . the wagons bounce and jolt along, with the Potters, not knowing the proper technique, slipping and sliding along the seats across the wagon bed . . . hang on, Pa . . . attaboy, Ma . . . don't weaken—the first hundred corns are the hardest.)

GRANDMA (musingly:) I remember when the first railroad came through this country. I can hear that first whistle yet. They drove in for fifty miles all around.

PA: I guess it must have been pretty wild country in those days.

BILL: Didn't you used to say that out in the backwoods they used to run 'em down when they were twenty-one and put pants on 'em?

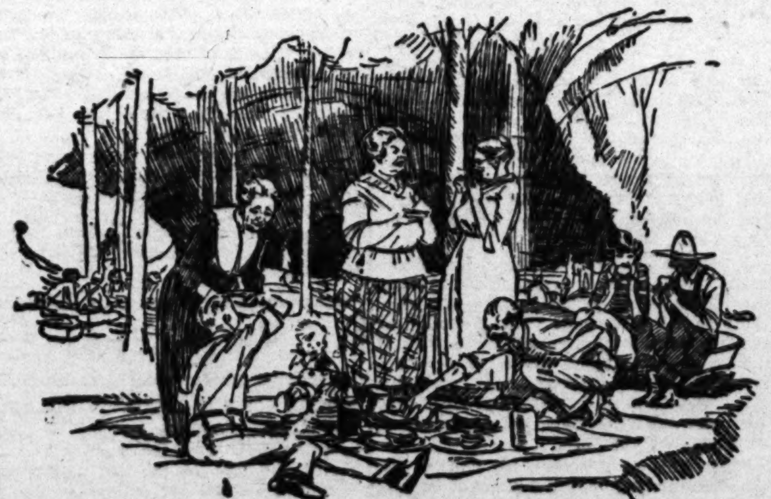
PA (who said it, but never expected it to get back to Grandma:) Who? Me? I never said any such thing.

SHOUTS FROM UP AHEAD: Here we are . . . Lawrence Falls . . . everybody out . . . don't spill the lunch.

Scene II—The Picnic

Tablecloths are spread on the grass in the middle of the glen and the contents of the baskets are spread out promiscuously . . . chicken in all its various forms, country ham, jellies, and jams and preserves, pies and cakes . . . the best work of a dozen marvelous cooks . . . the men help themselves first, while the women help the babies, of which there are dozens variously assorted as to size and sex . . . Mamie has found a gallant helper in Herbert Toler, a distant cousin, so distant, in fact, his parallax is practically nothing . . . Herbert thinks Mamie is the berries (he has just heard that one . . . slang travels slower than style) . . . he never saw anything just like Mamie before . . . if that's the way they grow 'em in the big city . . . baby! . . . meanwhile Uncle Tom, Grandma's brother, who is seventy and acts fifty, has eaten enough to founder four horses and is now telling Pa Potter and the rest of 'em what's what and which.

UNCLE TOM: The trouble with the world nowadays is that people want to travel too fast. Too much speed. They're lots more interested in getting some place than in seeing something worth while after they get there.



The men help themselves first.

PA (nodding approval:) Thass right.

UNCLE TOM (warming up:) Take automobiles, f'rinstance. You can take 'em all fur's I'm concerned. Take you as far in one hour as it used to take us in a horse and wagon all day, but what of it? You don't do any more when you get there now than we used to do. And you don't have any more fun. And you don't live any better. But you want to go and go all the time. Whee! . . . hurray! . . . let's go! . . . where are you going? Don't know. Everybody's doing it; let's us.

HERBERT (to Mamie—gosh, if he'd only have thought to put on them store pants instead of these overalls:) Lemme get you some more chicken or somep'n, won't cha?

MAMIE (gayly:) No, thanks. (Teasingly:) Maybe I'm not as fond of chicken as you are.

HERBERT (blushing a deep red:) Whu-whu-whu-who? Me?

MAMIE (archly:) Sure. Now, take that girl over there. Don't you think she's pretty?

HERBERT (scoffingly:) Pretty? Huh! (Ah, a chance to use that nifty.) Yes, she's pretty. Pretty twice. Pretty ugly and pretty apt to stay that way. Har! har! har!

MAMIE (to herself:) Gee, what an old one! (To Herbert:) My! Do you know any more like that one? That's good.

HERBERT (so she's falling for his wit, too, eh? . . . none of 'em can resist him . . . sometimes he almost feels sorry for them . . . it's so easy when you know how:) Sure. Now, I'm supposed to be walking down the road, and you ask me, What for?

MAMIE (dutifully:) What for?

HERBERT (hardly able to suppress his mirth:) Cat's fur to make a pair of kitten britches. Do you want to buy a pair? Har! har! har!

MAMIE (to herself:) Oooh! (To Herbert:) That's good; I must remember that one. Cat's skin to make a pair of mittens. That it? O, cat's fur; yes, I remember now.

(And so the mad, mad minutes fly . . . until Herbert suggests they climb up to the top of the falls, and off they go up the rocks.)

UNCLE TOM (still going strong:) The trouble with the country now ain't that one union or another is trying to run it. The trouble is that we ourselves ain't trying to run it. It just runs itself from one election till the next. One day it's running up a tree. The next day it's running into the ground. But these fellows that are all striking don't know what a real strike is. If all us farmers decided to strike one of these days that would be a strike, my dear brethren.

PA (nodding sagely:) Thass right. You said a mouthful.

GRANDMA (who overheard the last part of Uncle Tom's observations:) There's too many people don't know or they've forgotten where the food comes from these days. By the time the plumber in the city gets a potato he thinks he's got a right to potatoes. He never thinks anybody had to sweat and stew to raise 'em. He thinks they just grow all by themselves and he ought to have them. So we should go right along feeding the plumbers and the miners and the rest of them while they quit work any time they get ready. They ought to have to dig their living out of the ground for a while, and then they'd realize the man never lived who could produce enough in six hours' work a day to feed himself and raise a family.

UNCLE TOM: Those fellas in the city have got it all figured out for us farmers. All you have to do, they say, is stick it in the ground and God makes it grow. Tryin' to profiteer off the Lord? We'll give you what it cost you to grow it, less the freight and commissions.

PA (earnestly:) Thass right, you're right. I remember reading some place where there was a fella in a small Russian town selling hot water to his neighbors, and one of them says, only he says it in Russian, Say, you've got a crust to charge us for water. Water's free. God made it. And the Russian fella says, Yes, little brother, but God didn't make it hot.

(The long, level rays of the setting sun, as they say in the books, are now longing, or leveling, or whatever it is they do . . . the children have all been spanked three or four times apiece . . . the dishes sorted out and almost all returned to their original owners . . . the horses and the more obstreperous hardtails rounded up and hitched to the wagons . . . mothers are busy calling the roll of their young . . . the men-folks, now that the horses are hitched, climb into the seats and tell the women-folks how to hurry . . . the picnic is over and the families are about to disperse . . . the old folks with a pang of disquietude . . . will they ever see all these loved ones gathered around them again? . . . the years dance away as swiftly as cloud shadows on a March day and the children follow them as they followed the Pied Piper of old, laughing and shouting and chasing the butterflies of illusion over the hill with never a wave of the hand or a backward look for the old folks—for the old folks who sit in the doorways . . . who sit in the doorways and wait.)

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

Wooden Gas Mains

When a gas system was installed in Canandaigua more than seventy years ago there was laid in the main street a six-inch wooden trunk line 1800 feet long. In a survey of the distribution system this spring it was decided that, since this wooden trunk line had seen such long and faithful service, it must be time to give it a well-earned rest.

But when a section of the pipe was uncovered the engineers changed their minds because there was disclosed a remarkable illustration of the durability of the old fashioned gas main. Although this wooden pipe had been lying submerged in water it appeared to be as sound as the day it was laid. A hole was bored in it with an ordinary carpenter's bit. The inside of the log was just as sound as the outside. Its thickness was found to be nearly two and one-half inches, making the outside diameter of the log eleven inches.

Chips from the boring showed there had been no seepage through the fiber and the wood was not impregnated with a gas odor. There was only a thin film on the inside of the pipe. Otherwise the wood was fresh and clean. In laying this historic pipe line one end of the log was turned down for a few inches to about half its original thickness, and this was inserted into the enlarged bore of the next length, then an iron band was drawn tightly over the joint. The iron band has not survived as well as the wood. Several of the joint bands were found to have rusted through and had to be removed.—[Utility Bulletin.

True to Form

SAMUEL GOMPERS said at a banquet in Washington:

"The millennium is still a long way off, of course, but the worker isn't the slave he used to be." Few of life's pleasures are denied to the worker today.

"A professional was giving a new club member some pointers in lawn tennis.

"'Hold your racquet loosely, sir,' he said. 'Loosely, man, loosely! You hold it as stiff as if you were a hod-carrier!'

"'But,' said the new member mildly, 'I am a hod-carrier'."

Paid in Full

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS does not tell a story in the Senate often nowadays. He has had 30 years of public service and he is tired. At the expiration of his present term he will leave public life. He spoke in opposition to the bonus bill the other day and quoted Bob Broussard:

"He said there was a man in Shreveport, La., who went fishing over to Bayou La Fourche. He slipped and fell in and was nearly drowned when a man came up in a boat and pulled him out. The man from Shreveport said:

"'My friend, you have saved my life. There is nothing I can do for you at any time that I am not willing to do. What is your name?"

"'My name to me? Jean Lebon.'

"The man from Shreveport said: 'Mr. Lebon if there is anything I can do for you let me know.'

"'O,' said Jean Lebon, 'I live there. I have a little farm and my horse and cows I do not need anything.'

"Three or four months after, this man met Jean Lebon on the streets of Shreveport. He shook hands and said:

"'Now, Mr. Lebon, I am glad you are in Shreveport. My house is open to you. Is there not something I can do for you?'

"Jean Lebon took his hat off and looked at it. 'O,' said he, 'I don't know.'

"'A hat,' said the man he had saved. 'A hat. Let me get you a nice hat.'

"So he bought a hat and a lunch and plenty of wine. And the next day he met Lebon on the streets again. 'I thought you were going home,' said he. Jean Leban said:

"'I was. But I feel sort of lazy and think maybe if I stay over I may meet my friend again.' And he stuck out one foot. The man from Shreveport said:

"'Come on with me. Let me get you a pair of boots.'

"So he bought a pair of boots with cork soles and steel insteps and Morocco tops. And next day he bought a suit of clothes. Jean Lebon went home, but by and by he came back and it started all over, until one day the man from Shreveport said:

"'Now, Mr. Lebon, I owe you my life. I owe you all that I am and all that I possess. I am willing to give you everything I have, except just enough for me and for my wife and children to live on, but I want to ask one favor of you, Mr. Lebon; 'If I ever come into that dad-blamed country of yours again and fall into one of those black bayous and am about to drown and you see it, you let me drown.'"

The Modern Twist

FORMER Postmaster-General Hays in a recent interview was praising the air mail.

"Of course it gets criticised," he said, "and criticism is a good thing, but the critics of the air mail service, to tell you the truth, remind me of the producer who muttered, as he read the reviews of his new vaudeville program:

"'These critics are thorough, all right. They don't leave a single turn unstoned.'"

No Hell for Them

THE late Mrs. George Gould was not narrow-minded, but she hated any desecration of the Sabbath.

One summer Sunday, while motoring in Lakewood, she came upon a rich Lakewood family, the Smiths, principal stockholders in the well-known Smith asbestos firm.

The Smith family was picknicking. The father and the three sons in their shirt sleeves were drinking whisky and playing poker, while the daughters and the mother smoked cigarettes and played bridge for high stakes.

"'Well,' said Mrs. Gould, 'I wouldn't have believed that you Smiths had such faith in your asbestos.'"

Putting the B on Birth

DEAN HECKEL of Lafayette College said at a dinner in Easton:

"The Austrian aristocracy must be taking Austria's new democratic government very hard, for Austrian society was the most rigidly exclusive in the world. You had to have four quarterings to your coat of arms—that is, all the way back to your grandmother and grandfather on both father's and mother's side, all your people had to be noble. A drop of common blood, and you were not received at court or in society.

"This absurd treatment of good Austrians who didn't happen to be noble deserved to vanish as it has vanished, for it was stupid, absurd, cruel. In fact, it was all of a piece with the action of the boy who was found stoning a frog and yelling savagely at it:

"'I'll l'arn ye to be a frog!"

A Summer Sermon

WHEN PIUS XI, the new Pope, was Archbishop of Milan, he was noted in Milanese society for his generosity and wit.

One September morning the archbishop motored from Milan to Como to lunch with a distinguished company on the terrace of one of those huge and stately lakeside villas wherewith Como abounds. The season was at its height, the lake was gay with the great, gondola-like boats and liveried boatmen of the Milanese nobility, and the archbishop's host said with a laugh:

"Reverend father, if only you were St. Peter!"

"Why would you have me be St. Peter?" the archbishop asked.

"Because, reverend father," said the duke, "you would then hold the keys of heaven, and could let me in."

"My son," said the archbishop, "it would be better for you if I held the keys of the other place, for then I could let you out."

But the Super Rubbered

W. C. LAIDLAW, of the Kansas Farmers' Union, said during the agricultural conference in Washington:

"When people try to tell me that the middleman helps the farmer, I tell them in return the story of the fat actor.

"A fat actor had to jump from a twelve-foot cliff to a piece of ground that was hidden behind the scenes, so he gave a brawny super a quarter to be there to catch him as he landed.

"Well, the time came for the fat actor to leap, and, looking and seeing that the super was on the spot, he sprang carelessly into the void, as if the twelve feet were no more to him than twelve inches.

"Down he sailed swiftly through the air and—crash! he struck the hard floor with terrible impact. For the super, stepping back, had failed him.

"'Why didn't you catch me?' he moaned, when he could speak at last.

"'I wanted to,' said the super, 'but you didn't bounce.'"

Antidote at Hand

WIFE to husband meeting her at resort:) Did you put the gas out before you left home?

Hub: Hanged if I know! I can't remember if it was the gas I put out or the cat.

It's a universal worry, that—we mean the thought that we have overlooked something important before leaving home on our vacation. Here's a little dialogue on the subject from Hollywood:

Wife (at Coronado:) Horrors! I forgot to turn off the electric iron.

Husband: It's all right. Nothing will burn long—I forgot to turn off the water in the bathtub.

Ambitions

A CERTAIN actor who has been known for his matrimonial adventures one day approached a physician and asked for a thorough physical examination.

"I want to see that I'm fit for a good many years yet, doc," he said. "You know I'm to be married again soon, for the fifth time."

"H-m-m," muttered the examiner as he put the stethoscope to the actor's heart. "Of course this fifth lady is the only girl in the world for you, and this is positively your last matrimonial venture?"

"O, come, doctor," cried the thespian, much alarmed. "I'm not as bad off as that, am I?"

Revenge Is Sweet

"CONDUCTOR," screamed the woman who carried many bundles, as she paused on the platform of a crowded street car. "I thought I told you that I wanted to get off at Kenwood Avenue!"

"But, madam—" began the conductor.

"Don't you say a word! I know all about your car being filled and about you not being able to remember where everybody gets off. I have heard all that before!"

"But, madam—" again commenced the poor conductor.

"You may be sure," poured out the woman, "I shall report you for your impudence, too!"

She alighted from the car which started up again.

Then the conductor touched his cap and for the first time being able to get a word or two in sideways, respectfully called after the woman left behind:

"Very sorry, madam, but Kenwood avenue is half a mile farther on."

Say It With Music

IN listening to Italian singers on the records one is likely to get the idea that an Italian could understand every word uttered.

But my barber tells me differently.

He comes from some sunny someplace over there. Like all of his race, he must be accepted as an authority on opera. He comes from the land of Verdi, Mascagni and Leoncavallo. That is his passport.

"An opera might as well be sung in Italian as not," he was told, "because when it is sung in English you cannot understand the words anyway. I suppose you Italians can understand your singer perfectly."

He looked puzzled.

"You can, if you understand the words," he said.

Real Profits

A PROMINENT denizen of Wall Street, who summers at a fashionable seashore resort, was annoyed on his return home to receive a bill for a few small trinkets for which he was sure he had paid previous to his departure. Having always prided himself on his efficient business methods, and since the same store had done the identical thing the year before, he wrote a seathing letter to the store-keeper, giving his opinion of the man who employed methods which were the direct antithesis of his own. The incident soon slipped his mind and was not recalled until the following summer when he happened to pass the store. His anger having cooled, he determined to give the storekeeper some friendly advice.

"Well," said the storekeeper in reply to his lengthy discourse, "we don't keep any books, and to tell the truth it pays us not to. For example, last summer I sold a saddle, but when it came time to make out the bill I couldn't for the life of me remember who bought it. I finally narrowed it down to four people and sent them all bills. As a result, I was paid by three of them, so you see there is no necessity for our keeping books."

The Verdict

RUTH and Marjorie were spending the afternoon with their little friend, Jane. At 5 o'clock they informed their hostess that they must be going.

"My dears," said Jane's mother, "can't you stay and have supper with us?"

"No, thank you," they both replied. "Mother told us to come home at 5."

Hats and wraps were brought. As they were being put on, Jane's mother asked again: "Are you quite sure you must go before supper?"

"Yes, thank you; we must go," replied Ruth.

Marjorie seemed to have a different opinion, and said sotto-voice to her sister: "We don't have to go. Mother said we could stay to supper if she asked us twice."

Not to be Bullied

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW tells the following anecdote in his recent book of memoirs:

When I was at Yale the faculty included several professors of remarkable force and originality. The professor of Greek, Mr. Hadley, father of the distinguished ex-president of the university, had a caustic wit and his sayings were the current talk of the campus. He maintained discipline—which was quite lax in those days—by the exercise of his ability.

One day, when the boys had driven a calf into the recitation room, Prof. Hadley quietly remarked:

"You will take out that animal. We will get along with our usual number today."

DEAR SIR:

My life has been made miserable by my intense fear of death and the grave which has dominated my entire life since early girlhood. I am now 29. I fainted at the only two funerals I ever attended and cannot express my horror of death. I am a Christian not only by ancestry which means nothing, but by personal faith in a Creator and Redeemer. Yet in my very soul I shrink with dread at the thought of personally dying and wonder if this is abnormal in its intensity? I refer to only physical death, for I know the soul never dies and do not fear soul-extinction, but only death of the husk which houses the soul—the body.—S. M.

Yes, this fear is abnormal. But there is a way to lessen it, and possibly even overcome it.

What are you afraid of? It can't be the pain connected with dying. Very often death comes with no pain. We simply cease without being aware of it. And even when there is pain, it is no worse than the pain in many illnesses, or even the pain in he dentist's chair. Surely you have stood pain of this kind and know that you are ble to stand more of it. Besides, the actual dying is so brief, that men have accepted he pain of it serenely. You remember that Nathan Hale, in his right mind and good ealth and still young, went calmly to the caffold. He said that the only unpleasant hing about it was the pain, but that that as "only for a moment."

he Fear of Death, When it Becomes n Obsession, Can be Overcome

S IT death itself you fear? You say that you believe in the immortality of the soul nd that there is a Redeemer. Surely anyone who believes that death is merely the ame we give to a higher life than this one, ust feel that it is a blessing and a release nd an opportunity. As someone said, we ught to celebrate death as a festival, for death is greater life, it is the garland of ictory which we finally win. We ought to ejoice over the dead. Another human being has stepped upward into the golden ystery.

Perhaps the strange passage affrights you —the mystery of leaving all, as everyone as to leave all, and the going alone to omething outside this human world, outide all that you know and love and desire. What is more hard for human beings than e demand: "Leave all, and follow?" ven if we know that we are going to someing better, we tremble at the great change, e hate to give up the familiar even if it is ainful, we feel as if we were suddenly ripped naked and cast into the unknown.

But even this fact does not trouble a noral person. "Take no thought of the morow" is, in this respect, not only a wise sayg; it is actually the way most people live. ince the great run of people do not know, ven while dying, that they are dying, why hould they figure it all out in advance and se themselves in fears which will never ome true?

ll Fear is Abnormal. It is the ear of the Unconscious

OU see, your fear is abnormal. But it is not a whit more abnormal than any ther great fear. There are those who are fraid of darkness; others who are afraid closed spaces or of being alone; and still thers who fear some disease. Some people e afraid of fire, some of burglars, others ghosts. These fears haunt them, destroy eir happiness, and often turn life into a ghtmare.

But in every case the fear is the same ar. It is the fear of the supernatural. It the fear of the unconscious.

The story of the Garden of Eden is the ory of the birth of man. Adam and Eve first are much like the animals or like bies. That is to say, they are innocent, ey know neither good nor evil. What es this mean? It means that when they me to do something, they do not first use and say: "Which is the better, this that? I must do this because it is right, d refrain from doing that because it is wrong." In other words, they do not choose. And what is choosing? Choosing is thinking. We think over our experience, and what others have taught us, we examine our knowledge; and we come to a conclusion.

But when we act without choice, without thinking, how do we act? We say we act impulsively or instinctively. That, in the main, would seem to be the way that animals act. They see a thing and do it, or they don't do it.

Too Long Dwelling on Anything is Bad, it Should be Overcome

SUCH, then, is the "innocence" of Adam and Eve, the innocence of the animal. But the Serpent tempts them. To what? To eat of the fruit of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. And what does that mean? It means that thinking has begun, and that the first human beings have appeared.

But when we first begin to think, what is the great thought that comes to us? It is this: "I am I, I am myself, I am no one else." This is what we mean by self-consciousness. It is the greatest thing in man and at the same time one of the most painful.

For consider Adam and Eve. As soon as they have eaten of the fruit, that is, as soon as they have begun to think, they see that they are naked. But this merely means that they see themselves, that they have become self-conscious. And what follows on this? A curse is laid upon them, they are driven out of Eden, they must earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, and they are at enmity with God.

Why should this be so? It is so because when thinking, and with it self-consciousness are born, the mind, which was hitherto like the animal mind, becomes in a way two minds—the part that still remains like the animal mind, and the new little part, which is purely human, which thinks, which invents, which says of itself, "I am I." Thus appear in man the two minds—the conscious and the unconscious.

What is the curse in it? For one thing it is the fact that man through his thinking has made life hard for himself. He has invented and schemed and built until he wrought a civilization which demands the greatest discipline and the hardest labor to keep going. The animals do not "work," except at rare intervals, getting food or building a nest. For the most part they simply live. But man must labor, and he must do it daily, and in a regular way.

It is Man's Realization of His Weakness That Calls Fear Into Being

THEN, because man is aware of himself, he knows something of the world he lives in, he knows not only the terrors behind him but the dangers ahead of him, and he sees himself, little and vain, against the greatness of the heavens and the power of the elements. This feeling of littleness is the feeling of being naked, of being almost defenseless.

Deeper than this, though, is the fear of the unconscious. That little precious "I," the conscious mind, feels at times the presence of the supernatural, the demonic and the divine. For there is a longing in man to go "back to Eden," to be reunited with the God; a longing, in reality, of the little conscious mind to lose itself in the vastness of the unconscious from which it sprang. This is a longing which comes up when life is too hard for us. W went to flee, then, to the spiritual world, the inner world, and give ourselves, like children, to the arms of the Great Mother. Every religion speaks of this, the mysterious union between man and God, when the "Father and Son" are one.

You see, being yourself, separated from the unconscious, feels at times like a curse, because you are little and helpless and afraid. So you go beat on the Gates of Eden and try to get in again. In there is peace and innocence and forgetfulness. But this longing is really a longing for death. For what is death except giving up this world and going into another?

When the Conscious Mind is Merged in the Unconscious, Insanity Results

AND in a way it is death. Over every insane asylum could be inscribed the words: "Here dwell the living dead." Why? The conscious mind has been "swallowed" by the unconscious, and these people are possessed, they are no longer themselves, but the Demon and God speak through them in a way which used to make people reverence the lunatic as a seer and a prophet.

This is why we fear the unconscious. We feel this danger. And this is why the "longing for death," that is, for reuniting ourselves with the unconscious, gives rise to the morbid fear of death. In spite of our longing to lose ourselves, we tremble and are afraid at the thought of being destroyed, at the thought of becoming helpless, at the doom of insanity.

That is the danger. As I have shown before, it leads also to the greatness of man. For those who overcome this fear of the unconscious, who reunite themselves with it, who go into themselves to the deepest depths, who "die to be reborn again," win the ageless and divine creative power of the unconscious, and this, united with their conscious power, leads to great art, great invention, great discovery and everything which is inspired.

If We Master Our Fears We Experience a Sort of Rebirth

SO I WOULD say to the writer of the letter quoted above: You fear death, because you long for it, and neither the fear nor the longing have anything to do with real death. You know nothing of real death and you have your faith. But what you long for is that "death of the spirit" which the New Testament speaks of when it says that "ye must be reborn of the spirit," ye must die in order to live. Why does the New Testament use the word "die" in this connection? Clearly, because this reunion with the unconscious, this losing oneself in oneself, feels in some way like dying. There is the feeling of leaving all, of giving up everything, of turning from all we know and all we love, and letting the dark waters of the unconscious cover us over. We go in deep, we overcome the terrible fear of being destroyed, and battling with ourselves, we come out, "reborn," that is, with the energy of the unconscious, which gives us the feeling of a new life. It is like going to bathe in the Fountain of Youth. The unconscious is a spiritual pool, and we lower ourselves into those waters in order to gain their strength.

If then, your fear of death is not the fear of real death, but merely the fear of the unconscious, because you are one of those to whom life is too hard, and therefore you long back for Eden, then, surely, there are ways to overcome this fear.

How does this fear come to you? It comes through phantasy; that is, through the imagination. You imagine your own personal dying and this horrifies you. Why? Because you do not follow the imagining, or the phantasy, and see where it leads you.

Most of the Things We fear Never Really Come to Pass

PHANTASIES have a powerful effect on us. You can sit down and read a novel, which is nothing but a phantasy, something imaginary, and you will be shaken all through, laughing and crying. So with the phantasies we make for ourselves.

Take the simple case of a boy of 12 who was afraid of a swimming tank. He had once been pulled beyond his depth and was in mortal dread of going into the tank. But all the other boys did, and he had to, too. He first begged to be let off. Then, when he saw that this was impossible, to set about to conquer his fear, at least enough to allow him to approach the tank. The way he did it was this: When he lay down with his eyes shut in bed, he made a phantasy. He imagined himself going to the tank and going into the water. He made it all very vivid for himself, so that he almost seemed to feel the water and see himself going in. But such was his fear, which now overwhelmed him, that he couldn't even imagine himself going in. He saw his body refusing to enter the pool. He went on, however, trying to break through the fear, and make the body go. It took several sessions with himself, for several succeeding days, to win to this. He made the body go in. Then his task was to make it go in deeper, and he kept on until he not only immersed it entirely, but began even to feel a pleasure in it. What he had done was to "let go" entirely, to surrender to the water. And all this in his mind. So that actually when he had to go into the tank, the slight fear that came up was instantly overcome, he walked in boldly, and soon came to love the swimming.

All Life is Like a Battle, We Must Gird Our Loins For the Fray

THAT is the way out. If the writer of the letter will try it, she will see that she has it in her power to lessen the fear of death immediately, and perhaps finally to overcome it. What she must do is to lie down, quite alone, and preferably at night, and then, instead of turning from the thought of death, welcoming it. Let the imagination come flooding in. Accept the dark presence. Give yourself over to a phantasy of dying. Do it in the way that troubles you most—whether it is dying by sickness or by drowning or by fire or whatever it is. Go through all the drama of it, as if you were living it.

You know, before savages go out to battle, they have a war-dance. And what is that? It is an imaginary battle. They first play a battle before fighting it. Why? Because they thus overcome their fear. By actually going through the motions, the cries and calls, the excited action, they bring up the fighting instinct and with it courage and power. That is the way to handle these great fears. If you, in your imagination, go through with it all, you will break the fear, you will let go, and finally, to your surprise, you will come to a feeling of great peace. Why? Because the fear of death was the longing of death, and the meaning of death is not real death but union with the unconscious, the dying to be born again.

This death then is really the union with life. When it is found you will know that you have found the path into the depths of yourself, into the great unconscious. And there is nothing to fear when one does it in this way. The unconscious only has the power over us which it has over the insane when we do not know that we have merged with it. But when we do this deliberately, we merely go on, and after resting, we arise and turn bravely and boldly back to life and our tasks. And if we do this, overcoming the pain of returning and of work, then the new strength and peace we have gained will be felt.

But it should be borne in mind that only those who really need the union with the unconscious should seek it.

CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY
HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N.

Food and Energy

NEWTON G. THOMPSON writes:

"I always read the 'Care of the Body.' I have a problem for you I've asked several M.D.'s for a satisfactory solution, and they frankly told me they were stumped.

"Here it is! When I was working on the farm, a few years ago, I almost always found myself 'fagged' at the end of the day. Or, to be strictly correct, 'fogged' until I had partaken of the evening meal. I've worked at such muscle-straining work as pitching hay, plowing, and in fact any and all kinds of heavy farm labor.

"Now, many is the time I've come in from the field fatigued to the bone, with every muscle limp, then sat down to a hearty supper, with an appetite like a starved wolf, and in fiteeen minutes would gulp down sufficient food to satisfy my stomach. Lo! the change. Fifteen minutes before I was limp and fatigued and weak from exhaustion. After the supper, it seemed that my strength was increased ten fold, and I'd go out into the harvest field and shock grain for three hours, coming in not quite so full of pep, as directly after the meal, but far stronger than before supper.

"Can you explain how the system can assimilate the strength from that food and convert it into energy in fifteen minutes? We all know that it takes the stomach much longer than that to digest the food, and then it isn't converted into energy yet, but still has to be assimilated.

"Where and how did I get all that added strength in fifteen minutes?

"I've asked many M.D.'s this question, and they beat around the bush to try to explain it. They talk about psychological effect, and after-dinner optimism, and mental repose, and so forth, but it takes more than psychology, and imagination, to shock wheat for three hours, on top of a hard day's work. Those who have had experience will tell you it takes a goodly supply of plain, honest-to-God physical strength.

"Again, where did I get all the added strength in fifteen minutes?"

Before replying to this question, I will ask another:

A man goes out hunting and tramps all day over rough mountains, eating a "snack" at noon. In the evening, he comes home so thoroughly fatigued and worn out that he only partially undresses, and goes to sleep, without eating. After ten hours of sound sleep, he jumps out of bed, bright, strong and vigorous. Whence comes the strength? He has eaten nothing since he was so fatigued.

This is not entirely a parallel case to that cited by the correspondent, but it serves to illustrate the fact that strength and energy do not come from food alone.

The importance of food, as a source of strength, energy and vitality, is indeed greatly overestimated, and this leads to many grievous errors. Sick people, who can digest nothing, are given food "to keep up their strength," whereas, in reality, it keeps them weak.

We confuse stimulation with nourishment. We confound the expenditures of strength with the accumulation of strength, which is quite another thing. When you are doing hard work, you are expending strength, and are conscious of it. When you are resting, you are accumulating strength, as in the charging of an electric battery, not with fuel, but with electric energy. You do not notice this silent accumulation.

A weak man feels strong after taking a drink of whisky. Is he really any stronger? He is not.

The body is often likened to a furnace. That is wrong. Rather is it like an electric battery.

George Starr White, M.D., writes:

"Not long ago a man told me he was so weak he could hardly walk until he got up a good sweat, then he was a 'giant.' I told him he had a low blood pressure. It was below eighty and had been about that for years. Since that day the man has climbed the highest mountains in this country. It is about eighty now!

"When one is 'strong after a full stomach' it indicates a vaso-motor disturbance. The same person will be 'strong' after a cold plunge, something to send the blood to the center. A 'full stomach' brings the blood to the center and the brain is relieved. After a spinal 'adjustment' such persons feel 'strong.' Stimulation of the tenth thoracic vertebra will often make one of this type 'feel strong.'

"The vaso-motor system has more to do with one's ease or dis-ease than the 'regular' doctor ever dreams of. It is really the newest interpretation of most ills. Bad eating changes the circulation as much as a bad temper does. Then the 'spells of weakness.'"

In his book "Vitality, Fasting and Nutrition," Hereward Carrington advances the theory that strength and energy do not come from food, but from some outer source which is absorbed more readily during rest and sleep, and that food is needed only to repair the small amount of tissue waste. Cases are common where men have gained strength after a fast of a week or more. This view is shared by A. Rabagliati, M.D., of England and by some other writers.

Carrington writes:

"I have watched dozens and scores of patients during their protracted fasts—some of them lasting forty, fifty, or more days; I have experimented repeatedly upon myself; I have induced some of my friends to experiment upon themselves likewise; I think I may claim to have read everything written bearing either directly or indirectly upon this question; and I can honestly say that, as a result of this work, and in spite of, or rather, in consequence of, my observations and repeated experiments, not one iota of evidence has ever been forthcoming that our energies are in any way dependent upon our food, or that they lessen upon its withdrawal; or that the present generally accepted theory of the relations of food and energy is anything but absurdly and demonstrably untrue; that the vital energies, so far from being lessened, invariably increase, as the fast progresses (no matter what the feelings of weakness may seem to indicate;) that the mind is never affected by the fast, in any manner whatever, or in any other way than beneficially, being rendered more acute and clearer; and that emaciation does not ensue to anything like the extent generally supposed—being even then due to other causes than the withdrawal of the food—and, if the fast be terminated at the return of natural hunger, the reduction noticed will be only that from a diseased to a normal condition. Finally, that the theory that the vital energies—bodily and mental—are completely prostrated and dissipated in consequence of the withdrawal of food is a pure myth, existent only in the minds of those persons who think that this must be the case (and, indeed, it must be if the theory held today is correct,) but having no foundation whatever in actual fact. . . .

"It may be objected that we frequently receive benefit from a meal—we feel decidedly 'better' for it—and consequently it must be strengthening us, for how, otherwise,, would these effects become apparent? Now I contend that this feeling is not strength, but stimulation; and this may be readily perceived, it seems to me, when we realize that, even according to the accepted theories, food must be assimilated and digested before it can impart any energy to the system, and this process requires considerable time. Obviously, therefore, the immediate effect of food must be due to its stimulating, not to its 'strengthening' quality. . . .

"That my theory is correct may be shown in a number of ways. Let us take the drunkard, who is accustomed to his habitual stimulation. Let this be withdrawn and what is the result? Prostration and weakness, absolute. Since we know that stimulants do not and cannot really impart strength to the organism, but only occasion its expenditure, it is obvious that the parallel is exact. A withdrawal of stimulation does, in both cases, result in weakness and apparent loss of energy; but in both cases is the weakness illusory—resulting from a withdrawal of the cause of vital expenditures; the resultant weakness being exactly proportioned to the amount of the previous stimulation, and just as much as it is missed, just so much is a fast necessary. The greater the stimulation, the more necessary is the fast, in order to restore the health and wasted energies, since the more abnormal the condition of the organism. . . .

"In many ways, it is now practically recognized that food does not furnish our strength and energy—at least, to anything like the proportionate degree to the amount of food ingested. Business men realize the fact, and for that reason they eat the lightest of lunches when a heavy afternoon's work is in sight, which means, of course, that the nearer they approach an actual fast, the more energy they will have for their bodily and mental labor for the rest of the day. But if food supplies the energy, exactly the reverse of this should hold good; the greater the amount of work necessitated, the more food should be eaten. This is the logical outcome of the theory, and the only conclusion we can possibly reach, provided we are logical. Seeing that such is not the case, it is evident that the theory must be wrong, and that our strength and energy cannot be derived from the food we eat, but is, on the contrary, the one great cause of its expenditure and waste."

To these statements of Carrington I may add that Hindu adepts believe strength to be derived from a mysterious "prana," in the air. Hence, they attach great importance to methods of deep breathing.

Whether or not we accept these theories, in full, it must be admitted, by any earnest and unprejudiced investigator, that the need of large quantities of food has been grossly exaggerated, and that a great majority of people, from habit, eat far too much, this being the cause of a great majority of human ailments.

Also, this shows the criminal folly of feeding sick people, thus making recov tedious, or impossible.

SISTER ANNE

by Henry Kitchell Webster

[illegible] st Sunday)

[illegible] k, anyhow," Char[illegible] sing. "Have a good [illegible] ake Jamesie off me, will [illegible] uined the signature on a [illegible] good check. Oh, I don't care what you do with him. Take him along upstairs with you, if you're going. He'll have a grand time with your trunk until you get your things hung up."

"Sure," said Anne, "I'd love to." And then actually caught herself on the edge of an apology for having left her room like that. Half-way up the stairs she was sufficiently recovered to stop and say: "That's one to you. I thought perhaps if I left 'em you'd think it was your Christian duty to put them away for me."

"You're going to know me a whole lot better before you go back to school," Charlotte called after her.

If what Charlotte meant by this prediction was that Anne was going to accumulate a lot of new and unsuspected data about her, it was verified. As an entelechy, on the other hand, Charlotte day by day became to Anne's bright, hard, young mind more mysterious.

The theory and technique of the jump was a subject in which Anne was professedly expert. Among her friends in school she gave lessons in it by precept and example. Any situation, no matter how difficult intrinsically, in which you could manage to get the jump on your rival or opponent, was far from hopeless. You kept the jump by knowing what you were going to do next, while the other party to the affair was still contemplating the thing you had done last, and then by doing that next thing decisively, just as he came up for air. The principal of Anne's school could have borne eloquent and pathetic testimony to the child's talents in this branch of applied psychology; the hair bobbing episode was but one of a brilliant galaxy.

Well, the thing that Anne's expertness enabled her clearly to perceive at the end of the first twenty-four hours of her visit to Charlotte was that her elder sister had got the jump on her. How she had got it remained a mystery. For the first evening and the first morning of the visit, the jump had been with Anne, but somehow or other during her absence at the matinee the shoe had, so to speak, changed feet. If you want an example, Charlotte's manner of dealing with her father's letter will serve.

When Anne came downstairs with the baby (she'd had a revealing experience with him up there in her room, while she tried to do something entirely at cross purposes with his. She'd never had the care of a small, irresponsible ruffian like this before except under circumstances in which she could give him her whole attention, and she could adunbrate, now, what it said for Charlotte's force of character that she wasn't in a sanatorium for nervous wrecks,) when she came lugging him, now, downstairs, Charlotte got up from her desk, took him away from her, chucked him casually on to the davenport, and said:

"I got a letter from father this afternoon, from the ship just before they sailed. He sent his love to you. I'd show you the letter, but Jamesie got it and chewed it up. They're going to have a grand time, he and mother. She sent her love, too, to both of us."

She had nothing more, it appeared, to volunteer about the contents of the letter, and the crime imputed to Jamesie was certainly plausible enough. An even imperfectly masticated letter wasn't a thing you could ask to have exhibited as a document.

"Did he say anything," Anne asked, after turning the thing over in her mind for a minute, "about having written to me?"

"Not a word," said Charlotte. And she added, with a slightly reflective smile, "of course, there's no reason why he should mention a thing like that—to me."

"Meaning he wouldn't want to make you jealous," Anne commented, in the hope of starting something.

But all she got from Charlotte was, "Oh, well, that's your idea."

"I suppose he may have sent my letter to the school," Anne reflected.

"Of course," said Charlotte. She was kneeling on the davenport, holding the baby by the feet, and letting him down over the back of it, a proceeding which roused him to such ecstasies of delight that it wasn't easy to hear just what she said. "Of course, people never realize how long it takes a letter to come clear across from San Francisco."

Anne was conscious of a wish that it were practicable to put young Jamesie on the witness stand and learn whether he really had chewed up a letter that afternoon or not. Another thing which she found herself surprisingly concerned to know was whether or not her father had sent any money to Charlotte, but this was a thing which her code wouldn't permit her to ask. People's motives, their hidden impulses and unformulated desires, were fair game in the sort of inquisitions she and her friends were in the habit of conducting; but at practical, material facts one drew the line; firmly, too, or their stimulating analyses would degenerate into precisely the prying sort of gossip which they held themselves so superior to. But did Charlotte understand her immunity? Did she know enough to bank upon it? You could hardly think at all with the baby carrying on like that.

"I hope those poor simps at the school will know enough to forward it to me here," Anne said. "It would be just like them to hold it for me. If I don't get my allowance at that, I won't have money enough to go back."

"Oh, we can manage that all right, I guess," said Charlotte. Don't spoil your vacation worrying about it, anyhow."

Then there was the matter of Wilfred. Anne, not resentful a bit, she was able to assure herself, of her sister's new attitude, but feeling that, as a mere sporting proposition, she must get the upper hand of her if she could, decided that perhaps Wilfred was the handle that this could be done by. Charlotte really and unreservedly adored him—anyone could see that. But was he equally mad about her? Was any man, for that matter, ever so fond as to be totally insensible to all magnetic waves save those which came from a single source? And even if Wilfred was, how sure of this was Charlotte? She had, for a fact, seemed a little startled that first morning over Anne's suggested uncertainty whether she wished to dress to excite him or not. He'd seemed unconcerned enough about her up to now; friendly and jolly and all that—simply a brother-in-law, nothing more. But this was no sign she couldn't get some change out of him if she tried. Well, it was worth an experiment or two, anyhow.

It was in bed one morning that she first entertained this line of thought, and she was pondering upon the most effective time and place for staging the first move in the domestic triangle play she contemplated when the maxim occurred to her that the way to get the jump on anybody was to do it now. The moment was favorable, too,. The breakfast routine of the Blunts was made to order for her purpose. Wilfred took a terribly early train to town, and his simple breakfast, consisting of oatmeal out of the fireless cooker and a cup of patent coffee, he usually got for himself. Charlotte was usually up at this time but not down; busy with the baby upstairs. The two girls, since that first morning, had breakfasted together a little later.

Anne popped out of bed; arrayed herself swiftly and ruthlessly in a pair of not quite transparent white China silk pajamas which she'd bought with the notion that they might come in handy some time, and her black taffeta Pullman; slid her bare feet into a pair of black satin mules, and stole downstairs. This ought to brighten Wilfred's eye a bit. The precise line she'd take with him she'd trust to the spur of the moment.

She rounded the corner of the dining-room, alight with the glad conviction that she'd got the jump at last. But there, at the head of the table, with the baby beside her in a high chair, sat—Charlotte.

"Anne, you duck!" she cried. "How perfectly sweet! Sit down and I'll go and start your eggs. Bill will be down in a minute."

"Hasn't he—gone yet?" Anne gulped, blighted by the belief that she was turning rather pink.

"No, he's being lazy this morning. Heavens, child, you won't mind him!" Then to cinch the thing she called upstairs. "Bill! Come along down just as you are. I want you to see Anne. She's looking perfectly frabjous."

It almost sounded as if they'd been having an argument about it, and this impression was heightened a bit by Wilfred's calling back, "Tell her to sit tight. I'll be along in a minute."

Charlotte became explanatory. "You see, Bill's quit his job to cram for three weeks for his architect's State license exams. They're fearfully hard and he's going to have to work like a slave. But he'll have to play part of the time, and I hope you'll play with him as much as you can. I know you'll have a lot of other engagements, but do, when you can, take him on and gay him up a little or he'll get to worrying about it."

Well, there that was.

In spite, though, of these and other minor frustrations not necessary to chronicle, Anne enjoyed her vacation visit enormously. Their entertainment didn't run to much—one musical show and numerous movies. But there was something rather electrical in the air of that household—the very last quality her sophistication would have expected in a suburban, almost bridal, menage like that—which kept you from getting dull, however little there was to do. And it was something that hadn't been there the night she came. Nothing had happened, so far as she knew, to make the difference. But something must have happened, and it must, therefore, be something which she knew nothing about. She spent her odd moments of unemployment picking away at the lock of this mystery, but she never started a single tumbler.

She thought a good deal more about this than she did about the nonarrival of her money, which was a matter practically more serious and hardly more explicable. She had telegraphed to the school, asking that the letter be forwarded; had telegraphed again to know why she hadn't received a reply; and had finally, on the day before she was due to start back, got a letter from them saying there was no mail for her at the school.

Her belief in the incapacity of all the school authorities was so deep seated that this catagorical denial on their part hardly disturbed her assumption that the letter was really there. This confidence wouldn't take her back to school, of course, but Charlotte went to the bank that same day and drew $60 for her. So that was all right.

The trunk was packed and called for by the transfer people that day; the part time girl paid an extra 50 cents so that the three of them could go to a movie that night and a handy dancing place afterward if they liked (it turned out to be rather the jolliest evening of the week;) Wilfred went off early next morning, after a light-hearted but satisfactorily affectionate farewell, to his day's cramming; the breakfast dishes were washed up, the traveling bag packed, and the baby put to bed, and it was still three-quarters of an hour or so until the foreordained arrival of the taxi.

"Just time for one last little talk before you go," Charlotte observed. "Plenty of time for me and probably a little left over for you. Sit down."

"We're going to begin," she proceeded when Anne, rather precipitately, had obeyed this order, "where we left off a week ago today when I had to run and get the baby or you'd have made me cry. I wheeled him around for three hours that afternoon while you were at the matinee, and I analyzed all of us but Wilfred for myself—father and you and me. I didn't analyze Wilfred because what he's like doesn't matter. All that matters to me about him is that there's nobody else in the world that I wouldn't lie to or steal from—or murder, I guess—if he really needed to have me do it. I'm going to tell you something you don't know. He never asked me to marry him. I told him he was going to and when it was going to be. That's to show you there are a few things your set didn't invent for themselves.

"I decided you were both right and wrong about the rest of us—you and father and me; a little bit right and mostly wrong, but that the little bit was more important to me that afternoon than the whole lot. I'm not going to argue, with you about that. There isn't time. I'm going to tell you what happened."

She had misread the girl's sudden stir of attention. For once in her life, Anne didn't want to argue. She was holding her breath.

Charlotte paused a moment, though, to put her story in order. "You don't like sob stuff," she explained, "so I'll try to tell it as straight as I can. When I got home with the baby, I found the mail, a letter from dad and two others. Dad's letter was to me, not to you, so I opened it first. It had a check in it made out to me for $300. I hadn't asked him for any money. All I'd said that was like asking was that another year when we weren't so terribly poor maybe Wilfred and Jamesie and I would be starting out with him and mother for some warm jolly place. As it was, I said, all we were praying for was that the coal would hold out. I wanted him to see that I meant it, but I left it so he could think I was just being funny, if he liked. Cowardly, of course, that was, and contemptible. You can say that, if you like."

"I'm not saying anythnig," Anne remarked. "I'm waiting."

"All right. I'll go on. When I saw the check as made out to me, I left his letter and opened the other two. One was from the bank, saying our account was overdrawn $1.47. The other was from the piano company, and it said that unless we paid both installments by the next Tuesday, the one that would be due then and the one we were behind on, they would take the piano away.

"Then I read father's letter. He didn't say a word about me or my having written him. He told me how you'd asked for $300 extra. He said he wasn't sure what it was for, but supposed you were trying to get by with something, as usual. He meant to let you have it, anyhow, but he was making the check out to me and he wanted me to keep it until the last thing before you went back to school, so that you wouldn't blow it in out here. He said if I could find out what you really wanted it for, he wished I would, but he didn't say anything about my not giving it to you, no matter what it was for.

"I'm not going to discuss father with you. When you're as old as I am, you'll understand him a whole lot better than you do now. I know you got the check and I didn't, but I'll give you this tip just the same, you'll get on with him better for the next five or ten years if you act more like a daughter. His letter made that plain enough to me.

"The minute I'd finished it, though, I knew what I was going to do with it. I gave it to Jamesie to play with. I thought he'd tear it up, but he chewed it instead. However, it came to the same thing, and the ink didn't hurt him. Then I wrote a check to the piano company for $30. It came out of your money, of course, because I was overdrawn until I banked dad's check the next morning. I decided that, from my point of view, that piano was more important than your dancing lessons. I don't have much time to practice these days, but I like to know it's there when I want it, to keep me from feeling like a household slave—or whatever you said I was."

Anne found herself, for some reason, horribly embarrassed. She got up and walked into the little bay window, ostensibly to see whether the taxi had come.

"You had your nerve with you," she said, in this position, "but it's all right with me. Let's not jaw about it any more. I can get on without it, all right. I'd have given it to you like a shot, if you'd told me you wanted it."

"Oh, I haven't got anywhere near to the end yet," said Charlotte, who hadn't risen. "Sit down again; he won't come for another twenty minutes. The rest is what really matters—to you."

This time it was Anne who felt her blood run cold. "The rest," she echoed, mechanically.

"When Wilfred came home that night," Charlotte went on, thoughtfully, comfortably almost you'd have said, eyeing the knee she clasped, "he told me he'd lost his job. His firm was going to dissolve partnership. Of course, he could get another—a man as good as he is can always get one, if there's any work in the city at all—only it might be hack work and his pay not so good at first. But then he went on to tell me of an offer he'd had. One of the men in the firm—he's a fine business getter, Wilfred says, and a good builder, but not very artistic—asked Wilfred to go into partnership with him as soon as he—Wilfred, I mean—could pass his exam for a State license. You have to have a license, you see, before you can be in a firm. The examination was only three weeks off, and if Wilfred had to take another job, he wouldn't be able to pass it. And, since he had to have a job to keep us going, he was going to have to turn down the offer.

CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY
HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

Food and Energy

NEWTON G. THOMPSON writes:

"I always read the 'Care of the Body.' I have a problem for you I've asked several M.D.'s for a satisfactory solution, and they frankly told me they were stumped.

"Here it is! When I was working on the farm, a few years ago, I almost always found myself 'fagged' at the end of the day. Or, to be strictly correct, 'fogged' until I had partaken of the evening meal. I've worked at such muscle-straining work as pitching hay, plowing, and in fact any and all kinds of heavy farm labor.

"Now, many is the time I've come in from the field fatigued to the bone, with every muscle limp, then sat down to a hearty supper, with an appetite like a starved wolf, and in fiteeen minutes would gulp down sufficient food to satisfy my stomach. Lo! the change. Fifteen minutes before I was limp and fatigued and weak from exhaustion. After the supper, it seemed that my strength was increased ten fold, and I'd go out into the harvest field and shock grain for three hours, coming in not quite so full of pep, as directly after the meal, but far stronger than before supper.

"Can you explain how the system can assimilate the strength from that food and convert it into energy in fifteen minutes? We all know that it takes the stomach much longer than that to digest the food, and then it isn't converted into energy yet, but still has to be assimilated.

"Where and how did I get all that added strength in fifteen minutes?

"I've asked many M.D.'s this question, and they beat around the bush to try to explain it. They talk about psychological effect, and after-dinner optimism, and mental repose, and so forth, but it takes more than psychology, and imagination, to shock wheat for three hours, on top of a hard day's work. Those who have had experience will tell you it takes a goodly supply of plain, honest-to-God physical strength.

"Again, where did I get all the added strength in fifteen minutes?"

Before replying to this question, I will ask another:

A man goes out hunting and tramps all day over rough mountains, eating a "snack" at noon. In the evening, he comes home so thoroughly fatigued and worn out that he only partially undresses, and goes to sleep, without eating. After ten hours of sound sleep, he jumps out of bed, bright, strong and vigorous. Whence comes the strength? He has eaten nothing since he was so fatigued.

This is not entirely a parallel case to that cited by the correspondent, but it serves to illustrate the fact that strength and energy do not come from food alone.

The importance of food, as a source of strength, energy and vitality, is indeed greatly overestimated, and this leads to many grievous errors. Sick people, who can digest nothing, are given food "to keep up their strength," whereas, in reality, it keeps them weak.

We confuse stimulation with nourishment. We confound the expenditures of strength with the accumulation of strength, which is quite another thing. When you are doing hard work, you are expending strength, and are conscious of it. When you are resting, you are accumulating strength, as in the charging of an electric battery, not with fuel, but with electric energy. You do not notice this silent accumulation.

A weak man feels strong after taking a drink of whisky. Is he really any stronger? He is not.

The body is often likened to a furnace. That is wrong. Rather is it like an electric battery.

George Starr White, M.D., writes:

"Not long ago a man told me he was so weak he could hardly walk until he got up a good sweat, then he was a 'giant.' I told him he had a low blood pressure. It was below eighty and had been about that for years. Since that day the man has climbed the highest mountains in this country. It is about eighty now!

"When one is 'strong after a full stomach' it indicates a vaso-motor disturbance. The same person will be 'strong' after a cold plunge, something to send the blood to the center. A 'full stomach' brings the blood to the center and the brain is relieved. After a spinal 'adjustment' such persons feel 'strong.' Stimulation of the tenth thoracic vertebra will often make one of this type feel strong.'

"The vaso-motor system has more to do with one's ease or dis-ease than the 'regular' doctor ever dreams of. It is really the newest interpretation of most ills. Bad eating changes the circulation as much as a bad temper does. Then the 'spells of weakness.'"

In his book "Vitality, Fasting and Nutrition," Hereward Carrington advances the theory that strength and energy do not come from food, but from some outer source which is absorbed more readily during rest and sleep, and that food is needed only to repair the small amount of tissue waste. Cases are common where men have gained strength after a fast of a week or more. This view is shared by A. Rabagliati, M.D., of England and by some other writers.

Carrington writes:

"I have watched dozens and scores of patients during their protracted fasts—some of them lasting forty, fifty, or more days; I have experimented repeatedly upon myself; I have induced some of my friends to experiment upon themselves likewise; I think I may claim to have read everything written bearing either directly or indirectly upon this question; and I can honestly say that, as a result of this work, and in spite of, or rather, in consequence of, my observations and repeated experiments, not one iota of evidence has ever been forthcoming that our energies are in any way dependent upon our food, or that they lessen upon its withdrawal; or that the present generally accepted theory of the relations of food and energy is anything but absurdly and demonstrably untrue; that the vital energies, so far from being lessened, invariably increase, as the fast progresses (no matter what the feelings of weakness may seem to indicate;) that the mind is never affected by the fast, in any manner whatever, or in any other way than beneficially, being rendered more acute and clearer; and that emaciation does not ensue to anything like the extent generally supposed—being even then due to other causes than the withdrawal of the food—and, if the fast be terminated at the return of natural hunger, the reduction noticed will be only that from a diseased to a normal condition. Finally, that the theory that the vital energies—bodily and mental—are completely prostrated and dissipated in consequence of the withdrawal of food is a pure myth, existent only in the minds of those persons who think that this must be the case (and, indeed, it must be if the theory held today is correct,) but having no foundation whatever in actual fact. . . .

"It may be objected that we frequently receive benefit from a meal—we feel decidedly 'better' for it—and consequently it must be strengthening us, for how, otherwise, would these effects become apparent? Now I contend that this feeling is not strength, but stimulation; and this may be readily perceived, it seems to me, when we realize that, even according to the accepted theories, food must be assimilated and digested before it can impart any energy to the system, and this process requires considerable time. Obviously, therefore, the immediate effect of food must be due to its stimulating, not to its 'strengthening' quality. . . .

"That my theory is correct may be shown in a number of ways. Let us take the drunkard, who is accustomed to his habitual stimulation. Let this be withdrawn and what is the result? Prostration and weakness, absolute. Since we know that stimulants do not and cannot really impart strength to the organism, but only occasion its expenditure, it is obvious that the parallel is exact. A withdrawal of stimulation does, in both cases, result in weakness and apparent loss of energy; but in both cases is the weakness illusory—resulting from a withdrawal of the cause of vital expenditures; the resultant weakness being exactly proportioned to the amount of the previous stimulation, and just as much as it is missed, just so much is a fast necessary. The greater the stimulation, the more necessary is the fast, in order to restore the health and wasted energies, since the more abnormal the condition of the organism. . . .

"In many ways, it is now practically recognized that food does not furnish our strength and energy—at least, to anything like the proportionate degree to the amount of food ingested. Business men realize the fact, and for that reason they eat the lightest of lunches when a heavy afternoon's work is in sight, which means, of course, that the nearer they approach an actual fast, the more energy they will have for their bodily and mental labor for the rest of the day. But if food supplies the energy, exactly the reverse of this should hold good; the greater the amount of work necessitated, the more food should be eaten. This is the logical outcome of the theory, and the only conclusion we can possibly reach, provided we are logical. Seeing that such is not the case, it is evident that the theory must be wrong, and that our strength and energy cannot be derived from the food we eat, but is, on the contrary, the one great cause of its expenditure and waste."

To these statements of Carrington I may add that Hindu adepts believe strength to be derived from a mysterious "prana," in the air. Hence, they attach great importance to methods of deep breathing.

Whether or not we accept these theories, in full, it must be admitted, by any earnest and unprejudiced investigator, that the need of large quantities of food has been grossly exaggerated, and that a great majority of people, from habit, eat far too much, this being the cause of a great majority of human ailments.

Also, this shows the criminal folly of feeding sick people, thus making recovery tedious, or impossible.

SISTER ANNE

by Henry Kitchell Webster

"I'm glad you're back, anyhow," Charlotte said, without rising. "Have a good time? Come and take Jamesie off me, will you; he's just ruined the signature on a perfectly good check. Oh, I don't care what you do with him. Take him along upstairs with you, if you're going. He'll have a grand time with your trunk until you get your things hung up."

"Sure," said Anne, "I'd love to." And then actually caught herself on the edge of an apology for having left her room like that. Half-way up the stairs she was sufficiently recovered to stop and say: "That's one to you. I thought perhaps if I left 'em you'd think it was your Christian duty to put them away for me."

"You're going to know me a whole lot better before you go back to school," Charlotte called after her.

If what Charlotte meant by this prediction was that Anne was going to accumulate a lot of new and unsuspected data about her, it was verified. As an entelechy, on the other hand, Charlotte day by day became to Anne's bright, hard, young mind more mysterious.

The theory and technique of the jump was a subject in which Anne was professedly expert. Among her friends in school she gave lessons in it by precept and example. Any situation, no matter how difficult intrinsically, in which you could manage to get the jump on your rival or opponent, was far from hopeless. You kept the jump by knowing what you were going to do next, while the other party to the affair was still contemplating the thing you had done last, and then by doing that next thing decisively, just as he came up for air. The principal of Anne's school could have borne eloquent and pathetic testimony to the child's talents in this branch of applied psychology; the hair bobbing episode was but one of a brilliant galaxy.

Well, the thing that Anne's expertness enabled her clearly to perceive at the end of the first twenty-four hours of her visit to Charlotte was that her elder sister had got the jump on her. How she had got it remained a mystery. For the first evening and the first morning of the visit, the jump had been with Anne, but somehow or other during her absence at the matinee the shoe had, so to speak, changed feet. If you want an example, Charlotte's manner of dealing with her father's letter will serve.

When Anne came downstairs with the baby (she'd had a revealing experience with him up there in her room, while she tried to do something entirely at cross purposes with his. She'd never had the care of a small, irresponsible ruffian like this before except under circumstances in which she could give him her whole attention, and she could adunbrate, now, what it said for Charlotte's force of character that she wasn't in a sanatorium for nervous wrecks,) when she came lugging him, now, downstairs, Charlotte got up from her desk, took him away from her, chucked him casually on to the davenport, and said:

"I got a letter from father this afternoon, from the ship just before they sailed. He sent his love to you. I'd show you the letter, but Jamesie got it and chewed it up. They're going to have a grand time, he and mother. She sent her love, too, to both of us."

She had nothing more, it appeared, to volunteer about the contents of the letter, and the crime imputed to Jamesie was certainly plausible enough. An even imperfectly masticated letter wasn't a thing you could ask to have exhibited as a document.

"Did he say anything," Anne asked, after turning the thing over in her mind for a minute, "about having written to me?"

"Not a word," said Charlotte. And she added, with a slightly reflective smile, "of course, there's no reason why he should mention a thing like that—to me."

"Meaning he wouldn't want to make you jealous," Anne commented, in the hope of starting something.

But all she got from Charlotte was, "Oh, well, that's your idea."

"I suppose he may have sent my letter to the school," Anne reflected.

"Of course," said Charlotte. She was kneeling on the davenport, holding the baby by the feet, and letting him down over the back of it, a proceeding which roused him to such ecstasies of delight that it wasn't easy to hear just what she said. "Of course, people never realize how long it takes a letter to come clear across from San Francisco."

Anne was conscious of a wish that it were practicable to put young Jamesie on the witness stand and learn whether he really had chewed up a letter that afternoon or not. Another thing which she found herself surprisingly concerned to know was whether or not her father had sent any money to Charlotte, but this was a thing which her code wouldn't permit her to ask. People's motives, their hidden impulses and unformulated desires, were fair game in the sort of inquisitions she and her friends were in the habit of conducting; but at practical, material facts one drew the line; firmly, too, or their stimulating analyses would degenerate into precisely the prying sort of gossip which they held themselves so superior to. But did Charlotte understand her immunity? Did she know enough to bank upon it? You could hardly think at all with the baby carrying on like that.

"I hope those poor simps at the school will know enough to forward it to me here," Anne said. "It would be just like them to hold it for me. If I don't get my allowance at that, I won't have money enough to go back."

"Oh, we can manage that all right, I guess," said Charlotte. Don't spoil your vacation worrying about it, anyhow."

Then there was the matter of Wilfred. Anne, not resentful a bit, she was able to assure herself, of her sister's new attitude, but feeling that, as a mere sporting proposition, she must get the upper hand of her if she could, decided that perhaps Wilfred was the handle that this could be done by. Charlotte really and unreservedly adored him—anyone could see that. But was he equally mad about her? Was any man, for that matter, ever so fond as to be totally insensible to all magnetic waves save those which came from a single source? And even if Wilfred was, how sure of this was Charlotte? She had, for a fact, seemed a little startled that first morning over Anne's suggested uncertainty whether she wished to dress to excite him or not. He'd seemed unconcerned enough about her up to now; friendly and jolly and all that—simply a brother-in-law, nothing more. But this was no sign she couldn't get some change out of him if she tried. Well, it was worth an experiment or two, anyhow.

It was in bed one morning that she first entertained this line of thought, and she was pondering upon the most effective time and place for staging the first move in the domestic triangle play she contemplated when the maxim occurred to her that the way to get the jump on anybody was to do it now. The moment was favorable, too,. The breakfast routine of the Blunts was made to order for her purpose. Wilfred took a terribly early train to town, and his simple breakfast, consisting of oatmeal out of the fireless cooker and a cup of patent coffee, he usually got for himself. Charlotte was usually up at this time but not down; busy with the baby upstairs. The two girls, since that first morning, had breakfasted together a little later.

Anne popped out of bed; arrayed herself swiftly and ruthlessly in a pair of not quite transparent white China silk pajamas which she'd bought with the notion that they might come in handy some time, and her black taffeta Pullman; slid her bare feet into a pair of black satin mules, and stole downstairs. This ought to brighten Wilfred's eye a bit. The precise line she'd take with him she'd trust to the spur of the moment.

She rounded the corner of the dining-room, alight with the glad conviction that she'd got the jump at last. But there, at the head of the table, with the baby beside her in a high chair, sat—Charlotte.

"Anne, you duck!" she cried. "How perfectly sweet! Sit down and I'll go and start your eggs. Bill will be down in a minute."

"Hasn't he—gone yet?" Anne gulped, blighted by the belief that she was turning rather pink.

"No, he's being lazy this morning. Heavens, child, you won't mind him!" Then to cinch the thing she called upstairs. "Bill! Come along down just as you are. I want you to see Anne. She's looking perfectly frabjous."

It almost sounded as if they'd been having an argument about it, and this impression was heightened a bit by Wilfred's calling back, "Tell her to sit tight. I'll be along in a minute."

Charlotte became explanatory. "You see, Bill's quit his job to cram for three weeks for his architect's State license exams. They're fearfully hard and he's going to have to work like a slave. But he'll have to play part of the time, and I hope you'll play with him as much as you can. I know you'll have a lot of other engagements, but do, when you can, take him on and gay him up a little or he'll get to worrying about it."

Well, there that was.

In spite, though, of these and other minor frustrations not necessary to chronicle, Anne enjoyed her vacation visit enormously. Their entertainment didn't run to much—one musical show and numerous movies. But there was something rather electrical in the air of that household—the very last quality her sophistication would have expected in a suburban, almost bridal, menage like that—which kept you from getting dull, however little there was to do. And it was something that hadn't been there the night she came. Nothing had happened, so far as she knew, to make the difference. But something must have happened, and it must, therefore, be something which she knew nothing about. She spent her odd moments of unemployment picking away at the lock of this mystery, but she never started a single tumbler.

She thought a good deal more about this than she did about the nonarrival of her money, which was a matter practically more serious and hardly more explicable. She had telegraphed to the school, asking that the letter be forwarded; had telegraphed again to know why she hadn't received a reply; and had finally, on the day before she was due to start back, got a letter from them saying there was no mail for her at the school.

Her belief in the incapacity of all the school authorities was so deep seated that this catagorical denial on their part hardly disturbed her assumption that the letter was really there. This confidence wouldn't take her back to school, of course, but Charlotte went to the bank that same day and drew $60 for her. So that was all right.

The trunk was packed and called for by the transfer people that day; the part time girl paid an extra 50 cents so that the three of them could go to a movie that night and a handy dancing place afterward if they liked (it turned out to be rather the jolliest evening of the week;) Wilfred went off early next morning, after a light-hearted but satisfactorily affectionate farewell, to his day's cramming; the breakfast dishes were washed up, the traveling bag packed, and the baby put to bed, and it was still three-quarters of an hour or so until the foreordained arrival of the taxi.

"Just time for one last little talk before you go," Charlotte observed. "Plenty of time for me and probably a little left over for you. Sit down."

"We're going to begin," she proceeded when Anne, rather precipitately, had obeyed this order, "where we left off a week ago today when I had to run and get the baby or you'd have made me cry. I wheeled him around for three hours that afternoon while you were at the matinee, and I analyzed all of us but Wilfred for myself—father and you and me. I didn't analyze Wilfred because what he's like doesn't matter. All that matters to me about him is that there's nobody else in the world that I wouldn't lie to or steal from—or murder, I guess—if he really needed to have me do it. I'm going to tell you something you don't know. He never asked me to marry him. I told him he was going to and when it was going to be. That's to show you there are a few things your set didn't invent for themselves.

"I decided you were both right and wrong about the rest of us—you and father and me; a little bit right and mostly wrong, but that the little bit was more important to me that afternoon than the whole lot. I'm not going to argue, with you about that. There isn't time. I'm going to tell you what happened."

She had misread the girl's sudden stir of attention. For once in her life, Anne didn't want to argue. She was holding her breath.

Charlotte paused a moment, though, to put her story in order. "You don't like sob stuff," she explained, "so I'll try to tell it as straight as I can. When I got home with the baby, I found the mail, a letter from dad and two others. Dad's letter was to me, not to you, so I opened it first. It had a check in it made out to me for $300. I hadn't asked him for any money. All I'd said that was like asking was that another year when we weren't so terribly poor maybe Wilfred and Jamesie and I would be starting out with him and mother for some warm jolly place. As it was, I said, all we were praying for was that the coal would hold out. I wanted him to see that I meant it, but I left it so he could think I was just being funny, if he liked. Cowardly, of course, that was, and contemptible. You can say that, if you like."

"I'm not saying anythnig," Anne remarked. "I'm waiting."

"All right. I'll go on. When I saw the check as made out to me, I left his letter and opened the other two. One was from the bank, saying our account was overdrawn $1.47. The other was from the piano company, and it said that unless we paid both installments by the next Tuesday, the one that would be due then and the one we were behind on, they would take the piano away.

"Then I read father's letter. He didn't say a word about me or my having written him. He told me how you'd asked for $300 extra. He said he wasn't sure what it was for, but supposed you were trying to get by with something, as usual. He meant to let you have it, anyhow, but he was making the check out to me and he wanted me to keep it until the last thing before you went back to school, so that you wouldn't blow it in out here. He said if I could find out what you really wanted it for, he wished I would, but he didn't say anything about my not giving it to you, no matter what it was for.

"I'm not going to discuss father with you. When you're as old as I am, you'll understand him a whole lot better than you do now. I know you got the check and I didn't, but I'll give you this tip just the same, you'll get on with him better for the next five or ten years if you act more like a daughter. His letter made that plain enough to me.

"The minute I'd finished it, though, I knew what I was going to do with it. I gave it to Jamesie to play with. I thought he'd tear it up, but he chewed it instead. However, it came to the same thing, and the ink didn't hurt him. Then I wrote a check to the piano company for $30. It came out of your money, of course, because I was overdrawn until I banked dad's check the next morning. I decided that, from my point of view, that piano was more important than your dancing lessons. I don't have much time to practice these days, but I like to know it's there when I want it, to keep me from feeling like a household slave—or whatever you said I was."

Anne found herself, for some reason, horribly embarrassed. She got up and walked into the little bay window, ostensibly to see whether the taxi had come.

"You had your nerve with you," she said, in this position, "but it's all right with me. Let's not jaw about it any more. I can get on without it, all right. I'd have given it to you like a shot, if you'd told me you wanted it."

"Oh, I haven't got anywhere near to the end yet," said Charlotte, who hadn't risen. "Sit down again; he won't come for another twenty minutes. The rest is what really matters—to you."

This time it was Anne who felt her blood run cold. "The rest," she echoed, mechanically.

"When Wilfred came home that night," Charlotte went on, thoughtfully, comfortably almost you'd have said, eyeing the knee she clasped, "he told me he'd lost his job. His firm was going to dissolve partnership. Of course, he could get another—a man as good as he is can always get one, if there's any work in the city at all—only it might be hack work and his pay not so good at first. But then he went on to tell me of an offer he'd had. One of the men in the firm—he's a fine business getter, Wilfred says, and a good builder, but not very artistic—asked Wilfred to go into partnership with him as soon as he—Wilfred, I mean—could pass his exam for a State license. You have to have a license, you see, before you can be in a firm. The examination was only three weeks off, and if Wilfred had to take another job, he wouldn't be able to pass it. And, since he had to have a job to keep us going, he was going to have to turn down the offer.

CARE OF THE BODY

cine; political problems of hospitals.

"Afternoon session: Problems and methods of organizing hospitals; problems and methods of financing hospitals; legal problems of hospitals; community services of hospitals; community services of hospitals and their contact with other health agencies; hospital ethics; hospital facilities and methods for care of communicable diseases; drug addicts; chronic diseases; neuropsychiatry patients; children; disabled veterans of the World War; question and answer conference."

Where does "health" come in?

At a subsequent meeting the chairman made the following statement, as to the cost of sickness in California alone:

"One hundred and twenty thousand people are ill all the time in California; 900,000 are ill some time during the year. If only 20,000 of these are earners at $5 a day the loss in earning power is $37,000,000 annually; the total of a few items in the annual cost of sickness, not including fads and patent medicines, is $113,000,000 a year, or $28 per capita.

"As stupendous as are these figures they are by no means complete. They are coldly conservative. They should cause thinking people to consider how the constantly increasing cost of health is going to be maintained. New hospitals are being built all the time and there is a constant cry for more beds. In Southern California alone millions in hospital projects are under consideration."

Does it not ever occur to these people that when, with constantly increasing hospitals, disease also continues to increase, there must be something radically wrong with system of treatment?

Why Teeth Decay

MOST dentists, like most physicians, are content to relieve effects, instead of removing the cause. You cannot prevent decay of the teeth by tinkering with the mouth. Millions who have perfect teeth until they die never saw a toothbrush. Here in this land of dentists, toothbrushes are omnipresent.

Teeth decay because the body is not given food containing the mineral elements that form bone and enamel. Also, because fermentation forming foods are eaten, and the acid gas arising from the stomach eats away the enamel.

Parents who feed their children white flour and sugar are laying a sure foundation for dental decay.

Dr. C. E. Markey of Pasadena is a dentist who thinks for himself, and looks for the cause of things. Following is an article contributed by him to the Care of the Body:

"Has the generally accepted bacterial theory of dental caries (decay of teeth) stood the test, and found to be infallibly correct? Has dental caries increased, or decreased since the days of Dr. Miller's bacterial theory? Is not dental caries the most prevalent disease of humanity? Does not clinical evidence show that some races, in their primitive natural method of living, are practically free from dental diseases, and yet the same people, coming to a more civilized country, with its modern diet, fall a ready prey to dental caries? Are there not more dentists trying to combat this disease than ever before? Is not more dental publicity before us, by means of national advertised dentrifices? Are not dentists themselves gradually realizing the importance of nutrition, and attempting to inform their patients?

"Numerous questions of similar import could easily be asked, each dovetailing in to make a clear concrete picture, showing that the prime consideration of dental disease is nutrition.

"With all our efforts to combat the disease, we are unable to make any headway—rather the reverse. In the near future, recognized clinical evidence will demand the rejection of the bacterial theory of dental caries and supplant it permanently by a proven cause of causes—malnutrition. Nature intended our saliva to be our antiseptic mouth wash, also that the mucus membrane of the mouth should be our fortification against oral infection. Hence the greatest question before us is not 'How do germs produce disease,' but 'Why do they not produce more disease' since they are omnipresent. If disease was purely a bacterial cause, nations would have been depopulated years ago. Hence the most important factor for health is to so fortify our body tissues and secretions, that disease cannot obtain a foothold.

"Who, in our profession, has not experienced the fact that in some mouths—try as you might—you could not check dental caries? One would soon find recurrence of decay, even around new fillings. Then, all of a sudden, nature would take the disease in check, and the patient would step out of the ultra susceptible class into the partial or completely immune class. Why? Because of changes in body metabolism and the production of resistive body secretions, to immunize against the ravages of dental caries.

"Who, in our profession, has not noted the prevalence of dental caries in women who are pregnant. The old saying 'For every child, a tooth is lost' has too often come true. Why? Was said condition purely a local mouth condition, or was it a condition of reduced resistance of body secretion? Of course the latter, and if women only knew that they could pass through the period of pregnancy in good health by due attention to diet, surely tooth troubles would be alleviated and perhaps we should hear less of 'race suicide.'

"What fluid bathes the tissues of the mouth? Saliva. What fluid brings nutriments to the tissues, at the same time removing tissue waste? Blood. Do not each of them have an important role in maintenance of the health of oral tissues? Is not saliva the secretion of the salivary and mucus glands of the mouth, indirectly from the blood, and is it not under control of the nervous system? Does not your mouth become moist from sight or smell of appetizing food, and does not your mouth become dry from fear? Also, in accordance with one's constitutional condition, the saliva will vary from a watery solution to a stringy or even a mucilaginous condition, each of which has an important bearing upon ravages on the mouth, namely, a question of general bodily resistive power, as an active agent of immunity or susceptibility to oral diseases.

"Who can deny that the same blood stream, which in eighteen seconds makes a circuit of the body, does not become a factor in oral health? Be it remembered that nutriment from assimilated food is carried in solution by the blood stream to nourish all tissues. Hence, the more active capillary circulation a tissue maintains, the easier it is for that tissue to function properly and the harder it is for disease to obtain a foothold. Hence the importance of thorough mastication of a hard, resistant and properly balanced diet.

"Who has not experienced that slick feeling of the teeth, after eating an apple? Formerly it was thought that an akaline base dentrifice was indicated, in order to combat the acid fermentation character of dental caries, or produced by bacteria upon starchy food. Today the generally accepted theory is that a dentrifice should have an acid reaction, thus stimulating the increase of alkaline saliva, as the saliva retards the actions of most acids up to a certain degree.

"The digestion of starch should commence in the mouth, by action of the ptyalin ferment of the saliva. Unless acted upon in the mouth, the uncharged starch passes to the gastric juices of the stomach, where starch digestion is checked, due to acid media. Hence, starch digestion is not completed until it reaches the alkaline secretion of the intestinal tract.

"There are many advocates of a mono diet, and no doubt it has its strong points, especially for that class of people who are suffering from gas and stomach trouble, yet who eat a meal consisting of numerous articles of food, without regard to their compatability or digestive control location in the alimentary canal.

"Nature, in her wise provision, has seen fit to associate or link together dental caries with reduced alkaline or a mild acid fermentative reaction, whereas in pyorrhea, we find an increased alkaline reaction. Hence, seldom is a mouth ravaged by both diseases and never at the same time.

"Who, in our profession, has not often witnessed the pyorrhea condition among butchers, in contrast with the dental caries aspect of the habitual candy or pastry eaters? Any change in the metabolism of the body from normal is bound to have its effect upon the resistive secretions of the entire body. Hence the importance of nutrition, as the controlling factor of immunity and susceptibility to dental caries, predisposed by neglect of the lure of the teeth and oral tissues.

"How to combat dental carries?

"(1.) More common sense interpretation of our duty to nature, with due attention to nutrition and those factors which are being so clearly proven as health factors, especially the substitution of salads, fruit or vegetables, in place of the agglutinous pastry, so predisposing to dental caries.

THE ADVENTURE of the DEVIL'S FOOT

Sherlock Holmes.

BY SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE

T WAS in the spring of the year 1897 that Holmes's iron constitution showed some symptoms of giving way in the face of constant hard work of a most citing kind, aggravated perhaps by occa- nal indiscretion of his own. In March that year Dr. Moore Agar of Harley eet gave positive injunctions that the mous private agent would lay aside all his ses and surrender himself to complete t if he wished to avert an absolute break- wn. Thus it was that in the early pring that year we found ourselves together a small cottage near Poldhu Bay at the rther extremity of the Cornish peninsular. It was a singular spot, and one peculiarly ll suited to the grim humor of my pa- nt. From the windows of our little white- shed house, which stood high upon a assy headland, we looked down upon the ole sinister semicircle of Mounts Bay, t old death trap of sailing vessels with fringe of black cliffs and surge-swept fs on which innumerable seamen have t their end.

On the land side our surroundings were as mber as on the sea. It was a country of ling moors, lonely and dun-colored, with occasional church tower to mark the site of some old-world village. In every direc- n upon these moors there were traces of ne vanished race which had passed utter- away, and left as its sole record strange numents of stone, irregular mounds ich contained the burned ashes of the d, and curious earthworks which hinted prehistoric strife. The glamour and mys- y of the place with its sinister atmos- re of forgotten nations appealed to the gination of my friend. The ancient Cor- h language had also arrested his atten- , and he had, I remember, conceived the that it was akin to the Chaldean, and been largely derived from the Phoeni- traders in tin.

have said that scattered towers marked villages which dotted this part of Corn- l. The nearest of these was the hamlet Tredannick Wollas, where the cottages couple of hundred inhabitants clustered nd an ancient mossgrown church. The r of the parish, Mr. Roundhay, was ething of an archaeologist, and as such mes made his acquaintance. At his in- tion we had taken tea at the vicarage, had come to know, also, Mr. Mortimer gennis, an independant gentleman, who eased the clergyman's scanty resources taking rooms in his large, straggling se. The vicar being a bachelor, was to come to such an arrangement, e had little in common with his er, who was a thin, dark, spectacled , with a stoop which gave the impres- of actual physical deformity.

hese were the two men who entered uptly into our little sitting room on sday, March the 16th.

Mr. Holmes," said the vicar, in an agi- d voice, "the most extraordinary and ic affair has occurred during the night. the most unheard-of business. I may lain that our friend here spent last eve- in the company of his two brothers, n and George, and of his sister Brenda, heir house of Tredannick Wartha, which ear the old stone cross upon the moor. left them shortly after 10 o'clock, play- cards round the dining-room table, in llent health and spirits. This morning, g an early riser, he walked in that di- ion before breakfast, and was overtaken the carriage of Dr. Richards, who ex- ned that he had just been sent for on a urgent call to Tredannick Wartha. Mortimer Tregennis naturally went him. When he arrived at Tredannick tha he found an extraordinary state of s. His two brothers and his sister seated round the table exactly as he left them, the cards still spread in front hem and the candles burned down to sockets. The sister lay back stone- in her chair, while the two brothers on each side of her laughing, shouting singing, the senses stricken clean out em. All three of them, the dead woman the two demented men, retained upon faces an expression of the utmost or—a convulsion of terror which was dreadful to look upon. There was no sign of the presence of anyone in the house, except Mrs. Porter, the old cook and housekeeper, who declared that she had slept deeply and heard no sound during the night. There is the situation, Mr. Holmes, in a nutshell, and if you can help us to clear it up you will have done a great work."

"I will look into the matter," Holmes said at last. "On the face of it, it would appear to be a case of a very exceptional nature. How far is it to the house where this singular tragedy occurred?"

"About a mile inland."

"Then we shall walk over together. But, before we start, I must ask you a few questions, Mr. Mortimer Tregennis. Tell me about last night."

"Well, Mr. Holmes, I supped there, as the vicar has said, and my elder brother George proposed a game of whist afterward. We sat down about 9 o'clock. It was a quarter past 10 when I moved to go. I left them all around the table, as merry as could be."

"Who let you out?"

"Mrs. Porter had gone to bed, so I let myself out. I shut the hall door behind me. The windows of the room in which they sat were closed, but the blind was not drawn down."

"The facts as you state them are certainly most remarkable," said Holmes.

"As to yourself, Mr. Tregennis, I take it you were divided in some way from your family, since they lived together, and you had room apart?"

"That is so, Mr. Holmes, though the matter is past and done with. We were a family of tin miners at Redruth, but we sold out our venture to a company, and so retired with enough to keep us. I won't deny that there was some feeling about the division of the money, and it stood between us for a time, but it was all forgiven and forgotten, and we were the best of friends together."

"Looking back at the evening which you spent together, does anything stand out in your memory as throwing any possible light upon the tragedy? Think carefully, Mr. Tregennis, for any clew which can help me."

"There is one thing occurs to me," said he at last. "As we sat at the table my back was to the window, and my brother George, he being my partner at cards, was facing it. I saw him once look hard over my shoulder, so I turned round and looked also. The blind was up and the window shut but I could just make out the bushes on the lawn, and it seemed to me for a moment that I saw something moving among them. When I asked him what he was looking at, he told me that he had the same feeling. That is all that I can say."

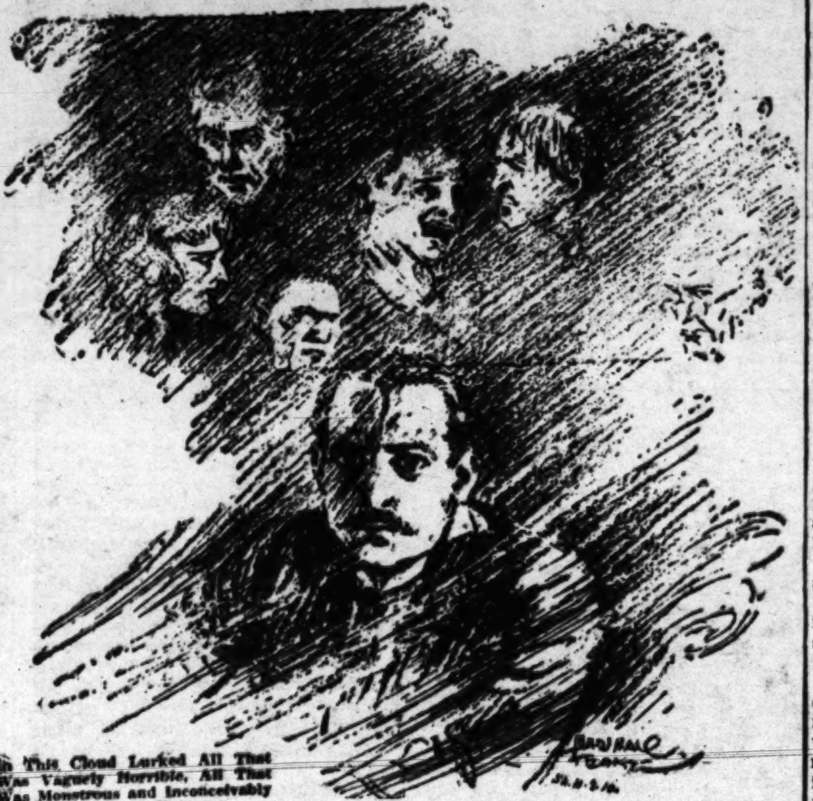
"Did you investigate?"

"No; the matter passed as unimportant."

"I am not clear how you came to hear the news so early this morning."

"I am an early riser, and generally take a walk before breakfast. This morning I had hardly started when the doctor in his carriage overtook me. He told me that old Mrs. Porter had sent a boy down with an urgent message. I sprang in beside him and we drove on. When we got there we looked into that dreadful room. Oh, it was awful to see! I couldn't stand it, and the doctor was as white as a sheet. Indeed, he fell into a chair in a sort of faint, and we nearly had him on our hands as well!"

"Remarkable—most remarkable!" said Holmes, rising and taking his hat. "I think perhaps we had better go down to Tredannick Wartha without further delay."



In This Cloud Lurked All That Was Vaguely Horrible, All That Was Monstrous and Inconceivably Wicked in the Universe.

Our proceedings of that first morning did little to advance the investigation. It was marked, however, at the outset by an incident which left the most sinister impression upon my mind. The approach to the spot at which the tragedy occurred is down a narrow, winding country lane. While we made our way along it we heard the rattle of a carriage coming towards us, and stood aside to let it pass. As it drove by us I caught a glimpse through the closed window of a horribly contorted face glaring out at us. Those staring eyes and gnashing teeth flashed past us like a dreadful vision.

"My brothers!" cried Mortimer Tregennis, white to his lips. "They are taking them to Helston."

It was a large and bright dwelling, rather a villa than a cottage, with a considerable garden which was already, in that Cornish air, well filled with spring flowers. Toward this garden the window of the sitting-room fronted, and from it, according to Mortimer Tregennis, must have come that thing of evil which had by sheer horror in a single instant blasted their minds. Holmes walked slowly and thoughtfully among the flower-plots and along the path before we entered the porch. So absorbed was he in his thoughts, I remember, that he stumbled over the watering-pot, upset its contents, and deluged both our feet and the garden path. Inside the house we were met by the elderly Cornish housekeeper, Mrs. Porter, who, with the aid of a young girl, looked after the wants of the family. She had fainted with horror upon entering the room in the morning and seeing that dreadful company round the table. She had, when she recovered, thrown open the window to let the morning air in, and had run down to the lane, whence she sent a farm-lad for the doctor. The lady was on her bed upstairs, if we cared to see her.

"Why a fire?" he asked once. "Had they always a fire in this small room on a spring evening?"

Mortimer Tregennis explaied that the night was cold and damp. For that reason, after the arrival, the fire was lit.

It was not until long after we were back in Poldhu Cottage that Holmes broke his complete and absorbed silence. Finally he laid down his pipe and sprang to his feet.

"It won't do, Watson!" said he, with a laugh. "Let us walk along the cliffs together and search for flint arrows. Now, let us calmly define our position, Watson," he continued, as we skirted the cliffs together. "I take it, in the place, that neither of us is prepared to admit diabolical intrusions into the affairs of men. Let us begin by ruling that entirely out of our minds. Very. good. There remains three persons who have been grievously striken by some conscious or unconscious human agency. That is firm ground. Now, when did this occur? Evidently, assuming his narrative to be true, it was immediately after Mr. Mortimer Tregennis had left the room. That is a very important point. The presumption is that it was within a few minutes afterward. The cards still lay upon the table. It was already past their usual hour for bed. Yet they had not changed their position or pushed back their chairs. I repeat, then, that the occurrence, was immediately after his departure, and not later than 11 o'clock last night.

"Our next obvious step is to check, so far as we can, the movements of Mortimer Tregennis after he left the room. In this there is no difficulty, and they seem to be above suspicion. Knowing my methods as you do, you were, cf course, conscious of the somewhat clumsy water-pot expedient by which I obtained a clearer impress of his foot than might otherwise have been possible. The wet, sandy path took it admirably. Last night was also wet, you will remember, and it was not difficult—having obtained a sample print—to pick out his track among others and to follow his movements. He appears to have walked away swiftly in the direction of the vicarage.

"If, then, Mortimer Tregennis disappeared from the scene, and yet some outside person affected the card-players, how can we reconstruct that person, and how was such an impression of horror conveyed? Mrs. Porter may be eliminated. She is evidently harmless. Is there any evidence that someone crept up to the garden window and in some manner produced so terrific an effect that he drove those who saw it out of their senses? The only suggestion in this direction comes from Mortimer Tregennis himself, who says that his brother spoke about some movement in the garden. That is certainly remarkable, as the night was rainy, cloudy and dark. Anyone who had the design to alarm these people would be compelled to place his very face against the glass before he could be seen. There is a three-foot flower-border outside this window, but no indication of a footmark. It is difficult to imagine, then, how an outsider could have made so terrible an impression upon the company, nor have we found any possible motive for so strange and elaborate an attempt. You perceive our difficulties, Watson?"

We returned in the afternoon to our cottage when we found a visitor awaiting us. Neither of us needed to be told who that visitor was. The huge body, the craggy and deeply seamed face with the fierce eyes and hawk-like nose, the grizzled hair which nearly brushed our cottage ceiling, the beard—golden at the fringes and white near

Give Your Family a Vacation

MANY family jars are caused by too much long continued close association, without any intervals of absence. Sailors on shipboard and prisoners in a jail and cats in a bag often disagree. The answer is that members of a family should, as far as possible, have their individual rooms and break away from each other, once in a while.

The following is by Mrs. John Robertson in the Hygienist:

"Our town, like your town and most towns nowadays, maintains a camping ground for tourists. Did you ever go out and have a look at the people stopping there? They make an interesting study. They are supposed to be having the time of their lives, and they certainly are working hard and conscientiously at the job. There is the family car and a tent and a gasoline stove and frying pans and bedding and all such; and there is pa and ma and brother and sis. Ma is getting supper over the gasoline stove, which is balky and doesn't work very well; and ma drops some remarks reflecting on pa's judgment in ever buying such a stove. Pa is hunting for his razor blades and wonders why ma packed the things that would be certain to be needed first in a place where nobody could find them. Brother thinks sis looks ridiculous in those khaki breeches; and sis remarks that brother might at least wash his face before dinner. They are out on a vacation, a vacation that they have all planned for and saved for; but to be honest about it, they are not having a good time.

"The real trouble with this family group is that members of a family should, as far three hundred and sixty-five days a year for some time, and are worn out on one another. What they really need is a vacation from each other. They need this fully as much as they need a vacation from work and a vacation from their home town and its familiar scenes.

"There is no doubt that the family is the divinest institution that the Lord has planted on the earth, but even this institution has its limitations and its drawbacks. Being married is a wonderful thing and family life is a wonderful thing; but it still remains true that being married and belonging to a family is a very steady job; and no matter how nice it is, like California climate, it does get tiresome.

"The members of a family need an occasional vacation from each other. The conventional notion is that the proper way to take a vacation is to get the family all together and go somewhere. There are many instances in which I think this is a mistake. The essence of a vacation is change—new scenes, new impressions, and above all, new faces, new people. We can't escape the fact that the collars and traces and straps that make up the harness of a good family team do at times become tiresome if not galling. So I maintain that sometimes vacations should be planned so as to get members of a family away from each other for a while.

"This is particularly true of husbands and wives. Haven't you ever seen a wife who was always cross and tired when father and the children were her companions, but who would immediately perk up and begin to scintillate if a visitor came in? Haven't you seen a husband who had forgotten the language of compliment and gallantry so far as his wife was concerned, but who never failed to scatter verbal bouquets when any other woman came around? Such folk are not bad, they are not meaning to fail in their duty toward each other; they are merely in need of a vacation from each other.

"I have tried this thing and I know. When I get back from a trip of even a few weeks, my good hubby capers around the way he used to do before we were married. And on several occasions, when he has had to be away from home for some time, he certainly looked handsomer and was pleasanter on his return than before he went away. One time he had to be gone for eight whole months. [illegible] he [illegible] missed it as much, but as the [illegible] lengthened, his letters became [illegible] and tenderer (and so did mine to him) and after his return—well, we just had a second honeymoon.

"Some of my best vacations have been right at home, when father was away on a business trip, and the children were visiting their aunt and uncle. My children are the sweetest things in the world, but it is certainly a relief at times to get a rest from their eternal, 'Mama, mama, mama.' And when they have been gone for a week or two, how nice it is to have them back, and how I love to hear their voices, and to take up again the burden of their little interests and concerns and problems. I think I am a reasonably good sort of person myself, but I often wonder that my good husband endures me with as much patience as he does. The man who wrote that song 'My wife's gone to the country, hooray,' must have been a student of sociology.

"I don't want to break up any families by this article, but I make bold to suggest that you try the idea of giving yourself and your family a vacation from each other this summer; and see if they don't look better to you, and you to them, when you all come together again. It never fails to have that effect in our family. We have forgotten to see the little things that are the matter with each other, and we settle down into the family harness, and pull together with a new zest and a new harmony. Try it, and see if it doesn't work that way in your family."

Organic and Inorganic Minerals

GROSS ignorance prevails, not only among the people at large, but even among dietetic scientists, in regard to the difference between organic and the inorganic matter. The vegetable world feeds on the mineral world, but animals cannot. To animals, or to man, minerals in the inorganic form are a poison. Therefore, the mineral, as found in a vegetable or a fruit, and the same mineral, when extracted and used as a seasoning or preservative, is quite a different thing.

For instance, among the dozen elements found in foods and in the human body, is phosphorus. It is found to a greater or less extent in all natural foods, and in small amounts is necessary to the system. Yet you would not think of sprinkling inorganic phosphorus over your food, would you? If you did, you would most assuredly suffer for your folly.

Again, iron is found in almost all foods, and in the human body. It is a necessary element, in the organic form, and the lack of iron in food is often the cause of sickness. It does not follow, however, that you can benefit by sprinkling iron filings over your food, however finely it may be pulverized. Eat strawberries and spinach and lettuce.

Yet again, we find in normal food chlorine and sodium, which together form chloride of sodium. In the mineral form of table salt this is a preservative and an irritant.

MATILIJA

THE stamp of Spain will always remain on our Southwest, even though in the years to come the blood she sent to colonize the land will have been so diffused with the flood from other nationalities as no longer to be discernable to anyone but the ethnologist. This ineradicable mark, of which Cortez, Coronado, Cabrillo, and other early Spanish adventurers set the first seal, and to which the Mission Fathers, ably assisted and abetted by a host of later-day soldiers-of-fortune, both military and civilian, made voluminous addition, is in the names which the mountains, canyons, valleys, streams, lakes, islands and other natural geographical features of the region bear.

In one respect this is a matter for sincere regret; for the original Indian names were largely drowned by the Spanish flood, and in many cases have been entirely lost. And thereby has passed the most vital evidence connected with Indian history and tradition in the Southwest. In support of this statement, attention is directed to the place-names of various sort in the East and North—where they are largely Indian. And they link up our interest with the aborigines whose names they bear. Personally, I learned the Indian history of the region where I was brought up through the names borne by the rivers, creeks and lakes of the neighborhood.

I have no quarrel with the Spanish language. It is one of unsurpassed charm of accent, and is the equal of any in vivid and picturesque description. If the Indian names were to be lost, it were fortunate that they were succeeded by Spanish ones. But the regret none the less remains that the original Indian names throughout the Southwest have so largely passed!

The Guttural Indian Superceded by the Softer Spanish

EVEN where the Indian names have persisted they are often changed from the original—sometimes in spelling, sometimes in pronounciation, and perhaps in both. And this brings me to the subject which I have in hand for today—Matilija. This seems to be of Indian origin, but necessarily spelled as it is, in order to bring out the liquid pronounciation which the Spanish have substituted for the more guttural Indian one.

My first introduction to Matilija—the canyon—was when I looked down into it from the Ocean View Trail, that ridge-pathway along the comb of the Santa Ynez Mountains at their eastern end. There are two branches of Matilija canyon, at its upper end, the main branch and the West Fork. The former comes down from the slopes of the San Rafael Mountains, on the northwest, while the West Fork has its source on the side of the Santa Ynez Range—meeting the watershed of the Santa Ynez River at the head of the Juncal. It is this West Fork that one looks down into, on his left, for many miles when traveling the Ocean View Trail from the west end. Formerly, according to the tales of old-timers, a trail swung down into the West Fork of the Matilija Canyon from the summit of the Santa Ynez Mountains. Such a trail may have been there in the long, long ago, but I doubt if it has been traversed during the last quarter of a century. I have also heard rumors of another trail which dropped into the canyon from the summit at a point about half way along what is now the Ocean View Trail. But on my trip over the latter—described last week—I was unable to locate either of these short-cut trails to Matilija Canyon. The slopes where they were supposed to be were so heavily and solidly covered with chaparral that any attempt to make one's way down into the canyon looked like a foolish one to me.

Ventura River is Known as Matilija Creek at its Source

MATILIJA CREEK is the principal tributary of the Ventura River. Indeed, the stream might well bear the latter name to the very source of the former; or what would be better, as I look at it, the stream might be Matilija River throughout its entire length. As it now is, the lower twenty-mile stretch is Ventura River; then changing its name abruptly where it comes out of the narrower part of the canyon, the upper stretch of thirty miles—following its windings—is Matilija Creek. The course of the Ventura River section is north-and-south, while that of Matilija Creek is mostly east-and-west.

For five or six miles you can drive an auto into Matilija Canyon—passing Matilija Hot Springs on the way, and reaching Lyon's Springs in the main branch, or Wheeler's Hot Springs on the Lower North Fork. If you wish to go further, you will have to take to the trail—and up the main branch, after a few miles, you will have to make your own trail.

In common with many other Southern California streams, Ventura River and Matilija Creek have an unearned reputation as fine lurking places for trout. And this has had a large share in my learning much of what I know about the region—especially about the far upper reaches of the Matilija.

I once got the impression that if I went far enough up the main branch, I would reach a part where no other angler had had the pluck and persistence to penetrate, and that there I would find trout in plentiful numbers, and so unsophisticated that all flies—natural and artificial—looked alike to them. It was a happy and alluring idea, and the more I thought about it, the better it seemed to me. So in this happy belief, and in an exultant frame of mind, I started up stream about 5 o'clock one fine September morn. For several miles the going was good. Then I came to where the old trail to the Cuyama strikes off on the right, along the Upper North Fork. Above that, along the main branch, I found trying to locate where there had ever been a trail a waste of time; so I made my way along wherever the chaparral offered the least resistance—which much of the time was along the bed of the stream itself, making for a time probably a couple of miles an hour, but later not so much as that.

And things didn't look encouraging at all, I stopped occasionally to inspect likely-looking pools, hoping to get at least a glimpse of a steelhead now and then. But never a one did I see, nor even the ripple made by one retreating from the shallows to the cover of an overhanging bank. And everywhere along the stream there were broken bushes and trampled herbage—showing that others than myself had had the inspiration that "way up stream was the proper place to seek the wary trout, and that in following up that inspiration they had been no less enthusiastic than I. I was a little slow in coming to this conclusion, for it wasn't a comfortable thought, but I couldn't get away from the evidence. However, I lugged on until well along in the forenoon, before I gave up. By that time I must have been some ten or twelve miles above Lyon's Springs—from where I had started in the morning—and the stream had become so small that there was only occasionally a pool big enough for a trout to turn around in. And the evidence of previous invasion still went on and upward!

Like All Anglers I Persisted, But Alas, in Vain

I CALLED a halt. For me, enough is plenty, and too much is an undesirable surplus! I sought the shade of an oak and ate my lunch, for by that time I had worked up a "two-bear" appetite. After that I took a nap, from which I awakened early in the afternoon. Then, thinking I might have been too hasty in coming to the conclusion that there were no trout in the stream—hope is ever serenely rising in an angler's breast—I rigged up rod and tackle and commenced casting. But a mile of downstream work failed to bring a single rise. An angler's hope is hard to kill, however. It will accept almost any excuse for failure. I said to myself:

"Here, it is early in the afternoon! This is no time to expect trout to be out after their evening meal! You should wait until 4 or 5 o'clock, at least. They'll not be out looking for bugs and things much before that!"

I waited. But by 3 o'clock my patience gave out. I started in casting again, and added a couple of miles to my downstream trip, whipping every likely-looking pool. But not a trout rose to my lures. Then I gave up—finally and absolutely for the day, I said to myself—took down the rod and tackle, and put myself to the task of getting back to Lyon's Springs as quickly as possible. But the slightest sign of trout will make an angler forget all the resolutions he has ever made! When I was still a mile or so above Lyon's Springs, I came to one of the larger pools of the Matilija just as a trout rose to take some insect that was fluttering on the surface of the water. Although it was nearly 6 o'clock, and there remained scarcely more than half an hour of light for casting, and although I was tired from the long tramp, I couldn't resist the challenge. I set up rod and tackle and stayed by the pool; and to such good purpose that when I got in that evening, I carrred a string of half a dozen sizable trout.

And that's where and how I learned that the best in fact, the only—fall trout fishing along the Matilija is in the larger pools of the lower stretch.

Matilija Canyon is more than ordinarily picturesque, even among [illegible]lifornia canyons. It is V-shaped and narrow, yet not to an extent that would cause it to be technically classed as a gorge. And it is just winding and irregular enough to preclude any possibility of a monotonous horizon. It has long been a favorite locality of our landscape artists, and there is no place among the mountains of California—unless, perhaps, we except Yosemite—which has furnished inspiration for so many canvases.

One striking topographic feature of the region is the "Old Man of the Mountains." This is a ridge, rather than a peak, some four or five miles long, with prominences so situated that the skyline of the summit is startlingly like the outline of the form of an old man reposing on his back. The forehead, nose and chin are especially realistic. The ridge rises to almost 6000 feet, a height that makes it stand out in relief when seen from almost every part of the canyon. It is really the comb where the watersheds of the Santa Ynes and Ventura rivers meet. Its trend is north-and-south—at a right angle with Matilija Canyon, which is one reason that its skyline stands out so sharp and clear.

The Sespe is From What I have Seen a Good Trout Stream

SEVERAL major trails start from Matilij Canyon. With the exception of th Ocean View Trail—along the ridge of th Santa Ynez Range—they all lead off to th north, with two main objectives, the Cuyama and the Sespe. The Cuyama is a semi arid valley in the north end of Ventur county, beyond the San Rafael Range; an the Sespe is a stream of that mountai range which drains a large section of th central part of Ventura county. Incidentally, the Sespe is reputed to be the best trou stream in Southern California—and judgin from what I have seen of it, it would seem to have honestly earned its reputation.

Of the trails northward out of [illegible] Canyon I expect to treat somewhat specifically in another article, so I shall pa them up here—other than to say that th old trail to the canyon was by way of th Upper North Fork, leaving the main canyo about five or six miles above Matilija Ho Springs; while the Sespe trails, with a cu off to the Cuyama, leave by the Lowe North Fork, passing Wheeler's Hot Sprin about two miles up from the main canyo

There being two "North Forks" of th Matilija is apt to be confusing to perso who are not familiar with the situatio The lower one is the larger, and it is usu ly simply called "North Fork." To disti guish the other from this, persons wh wish to be specific always call it the "U per North Fork." On account of the being so easy of approach, both of th North Forks are fished out very early the trout season.

There is a plethora of springs along th Matilija, most of which are hot and liber ly charged with sulphur and other minera —so heavily, in fact, that late in the seaso when the flow in the streams is at low eb the rocks along the water courses are usu ly coated with mineral deposits.

CARE OF THE BODY

and is the cause of a great amount of sickness.

It is exceedingly hard, even for intelligent people, to entirely abandon the drug superstition, which has obtained such a firm grip upon "civilized" humanity. Many broad-minded allopathic physicians are depending less and less on poisonous drugs. In fact, the heroic dosing of fifty years ago is now looked upon by most physicians with mingled astonishment and horror, although here and there you may find an old-fashioned medico who still goes in for big doses of poisons.

Some, who have partially broken away from the drug superstition have taken to homeopathy, which is another form of suggestion. Others have taken up the "tissue salt" or "bio-chemistry" delusion. This is a step in advance from the hit-or-miss administration of a hundred different kinds of mineral poisons, because in this case only the dozen minerals found in the human body are utilized. When, however, these minerals found in the human body are given as drugs, in the inorganic form, they not only—as frequently shown here—cannot be assimilated, but they are recognized by nature as intruders, and she proceeds to cast them forth. Thus they also are, to a certain extent, poisons.

Otto Carque writes:

"They do not understand that it is not the chemical elements of the food alone that sustain vital force, but the electric and magnetic power stored up by the sunlight in the complex organic compounds of the vegetable kingdom. The process of digestion disintegrates these compounds, thereby setting free the latent electric and magnetic energy stored up in the food and transferring it to our system. The nutritive value of food is therefore primarily constituted by the highly organized combinations into which the chemicals enter, and which we are unable to imitate. We find in the living foods exceedingly fine and subtle qualities that are not susceptible to chemical analysis; and these are too volatile to survive the laboratory process of condensation and extraction.

"Plants derive their vital force from sunlight, air and the decomposition of their mineral food. Animals cannot make organic matter from crude minerals. Even the embryonic plants must feed on the organic compounds of the seed until roots and leaves are grown. The elevation of inorganic into organic matter, which takes place principally in the green leaves of the plants, is the starting point of life; upon it alone is based the possibility of the hgher forms of the organic kingdom.

"The fact is not yet fully realized that high degrees of heat, as employed in cooking, roasting and frying, also effect certain chemical and biological changes in the food. For instance, the albumen is coagulated and the organic salts are more or less reduced to inorganic compounds, according to the degree and length of high temperature employed. A man living mostly on so-called predigested foods will gradually diminish his vitality, because part of the vital force of the foods has been lost in their preparation.

"Another absurdity is to recommend such substances as ground oyster shells and bones to children suffering from scrofula and rickets. These substances will make good plant food, but they can never form tissues in the human body. The only way to restore normal conditions of health is to live on natural foods."

Don't Eat What You Don't Like

FOLLOWING by James Faulkner, N.D., is right:

"I have seen dietitians force food on patients even to the point of nausea, because of preconceived notions that the patient had need of this particular food. I fail to see the logic in such feeding. It is wrong.

"In studying the psychology of digestion you will find that the glands of the body are stimulated into activity by thought. Thinking of appetizing food starts the flow of saliva. The same is true of the other digestive juices. In the process of digestion it is very necessary that all the digestive juices flow freely, as needed, or the foods will be only partly digested and we shall suffer. When there is a dislike or repulsion for a food, it should not be eaten; for this dislike inhibits the flow of the digestive juices. To force food into the stomach at such times, regardless, is to store up a mass of partly digested, fermented or decaying substance, which is sure to work harm to the body. Relish what you eat or do not eat. If you have a persistent dislike for a certain food, leave it alone, there are plenty of other natural foods to select from. To get best results from the foods eaten there must be a free flow of the digestive juices."

At the same time, see whether you are trying to eat foods in wrong combinations, or when your stomach is not in good condition. Try natural foods from time to time and perhaps, later on, you may like them.

Also, when not hungry don't eat. At such times food will not nourish you. It will poison you.

Two Napoleons

IN HIS later days Napoleon—whom some call "the Great"—was a gross eater, especially of flesh foods. One writer has attributed the result of the battle of Waterloo to a fit of indigestion, suffered by Napoleon, at a critical moment. He died of cancer of the stomach, at the age of 52.

Harmsworth, who later became Lord Northcliffe, did much to commercialize British journalism. One who worked with him writes:

"It was Lord Northcliffe's fixed belief that he was a reincarnation of Napoleon. A commoner raised to the peerage usually takes his title from his country place, or a town which has been associated with his career or that of his family, or something of the sort. There is always some reason for it. But Northcliffe invented his title—and invented it solely in order to be able to sign his letters with the sprawling 'N' carefully imitated from Napoleon's signature. That and 'the Chief' were the only signatures he ever used in writing to men in his own organization.

"He borrowed Napoleon's postures and mannerisms. On the long walks, two hours or more, that he used to take around London or Paris—they were for long his only exercise—he strode along like Napoleon, head down, hands clasped behind him. He

Cantilever Shoe For Men, Women and Children

How Many Hours a Day Is Your Body Out of Balance?

The woman who wears high-heeled shoes all the time walks with her body off balance, which causes unnatural pressure on internal organs and often results in ill health. Over-high heels keep her weight thrown forward. She tires much quicker because her body is subject to strain — needlessly when lower heels are fashionable.

She tires much quicker also in ordinary shoes, because she is wearing shoes with inflexible arches. Every step is restricted by the rigidity of the ordinary shank. The Cantilever Shoe is made, not only with heels of various heights, but with an arch flexible like your own.

No steel shank-piece tucked away between soles, prevents the natural action of ligaments and muscles. Each step exercises and strengthens the foot. You escape foot-troubles that may cause headache, backache, nervousness and more serious ailments. The circulation is improved; a woman feels better, looks better. And in Cantilevers she is wearing shoes not only exceptionally comfortable but good looking.

Rupture Kills 8000 Annually

Eight thousand persons each year are laid away—the burial certificate being marked "Rupture." Why? Because the unfortunate ones had neglected themselves or had been merely taking care of the sign (swelling) of the affliction and paying no attention to the cause. What are you doing? Are you neglecting yourself by wearing a truss appliance, of whatever name you choose to call it? At best the truss is only a makeshift—a false prop against a collapsing wall—and cannot be expected to act as more than a mere mechanical support. The binding pressure retards blood circulation, thus robbing the weakened muscles of that which they need most—nourishment.

But science has found a way and all truss sufferers in the land are invited to make a FREE test right in the privacy of their own homes. The PLAPAO Method is unquestionably the most scientific, logical and successful self-treatment for rupture the world has ever known.

The PLAPAO PAD, when adhering closely to the body, cannot possibly slip or shift out of place, therefore cannot chafe or pinch. Soft as velvet—easy to apply—comparatively inexpensive. To be used whilst you work and whilst you sleep. No straps, buckles or springs attached.

Learn how to close the hernial opening as nature intended, so the rupture CAN'T come down. Send your name today to PLAPAO CO., 298 Stuart Bldg., St. Louis, Mo., for FREE trial Plapao and instructive information.—[Advertisement.

Is "Back to the Farm" Movement Growing?

BY WILLIS STEELL

"O I'm serious," said the commentator of conditions who was contemplating the metropolis. "Do you know that a proportion of the city's middle class seriously contemplates settling on farms?"

I had heard rumors of this craving of people for nature and simple living, everybody has heard them off and on as the moving spirit gets hold of us in the spring and fall, but a big migration to country life, meaning practical farming life, was a new slant. It deserved looking into.

Investigation shows that more than 25,000 families, tired of the struggle for mere existence in a city whose meretricious glitter had palled on them, are seriously considering an exit by the farm route. Certain small merchants, clerks and other householders, who can't see that they are getting anywhere after toiling and passing out the wages of their toil for a decade or more have eliminated from their hopes for the future every career except the farm. Only there do they see, or think they see, independence.

In this census the intending commuter isn't included. That class increases yearly. But wherever it goes, so long as it continues to earn its bread in the city, the commuting class remains city at heart. The people who are preparing to quit New York have a different purpose in view when they start to look for a farm. They say, and they probably mean it, that they don't care if they never foot asphalt again.

People Planning a Return to the Farm Are of Three Classes

NFORMATION gleaned from land agencies, bureaus of population, trade compilers, railroad passenger agents and noncommercial sources shows that New Yorkers eager to quit the city for farm life are divided into the following classes:

The poetical who like to see the wind ipple through fields of corn and who thrill hen the thrushes sing.

(These persons, it may be said at once, ould starve on a farm.)

The city clerk who is aware that he has eached the limit of salary he can earn nd who despite years of service still fears temperamental burst from his employer hich might result in his losing his job.

(This class is aware that it knows nothing bout farming or any specialty of country fe like poultry raising or fruit culture, but willing to learn and is tempted to the xperience by a natural desire to rid himelf of fears and gain freedom. It may or ay not suceed, but the emphasis falls on e "not.")

The citizens who were raised on a farm d who know one when they see it; who lso know that a well chosen farm can asily be made to support a family if noth- g more.

(These citizens have the country in their lood; they have ever cherished a desire to turn to the land. Their wishes are mod- t, and if they fulfill their dream in nine ses out of ten they have no valid reason repent.)

It has been said that thousands of New ork residents are seriously seeking infor- ation in the farm market. This is not an aggeration at the moment, although a eat proportion of them will doubtless ange their minds or will postpone an odus from the city until they find the ry farm they want to own.

eap Farms Expensive Regardless Price Paid for Them

NY impending economic difficulty and all existing interruptions of an easy life in wn brings a monster mail to the agencies at deal in farm lands. Strikes on the ansportation systems, increased rents and her costs of living, dread of a scarcity of al—these invariably set people to think- again of how happy they might be if ey lived off their own lands, cut wood om their own timbered lands, raised their n beef, pork, poultry; in a word, if they d what every mortal ardently desires, lependence.

Then they write or call on the farm ency and pass in review what it offers. metimes they do this every year or so, when the crisis goes they forget it til another crisis comes up.

Among these undecided farm seekers are en genuine farm breeds, but the latter fer from the frivolous kind, because it is ost certain that the day will come that see them as actual purchasers. What y are waiting for is not a "cheap" farm one that will promise to be self-sup- ting. In other words, they know what they want and snap it up when it appears.

"There are twice as many inquirers of the latter class as of the former," said the farm agent who relieved himself of some of the wisdom concentrated above. "An inch advertisement of a small but picturesque property in Hudson county inserted in one newspaper once brought 650 inquiries; another of equal size telling of a genuine bargain in a real farm fully equipped and with grain in the field brought less than 300."

To them, as to the futile poets and others who leap before they look, the farm is a refuge from the cares that infest the city. The only difference is a big one—the born farmer wants his refuge to pay for itself and support himself and family afterward.

More than 25,000 families, tired of the struggle in the city, are seriously considering a nexit by the farm route.

Therefore he seeks a farm with ample acreage, stocked and equipped with machinery, one that has been wisely managed, for he knows that although he pays a high price at the start he is actually getting his home cheaper than if he bought for a great deal less money an impoverished and empty quarter section of land.

Where Do You Want To Go Is An Important Question

"WHERE do you want to go?" is almost the first question asked of a home seeker who has shown that he knows land in the real sense of potential income from it.

And the answer of such a farmer is almost invariably:

"Anywhere, Ohio, Idaho, Michigan, it matters not, so that I get a farm that deserves not to be wasted and that won't waste me."

But the "play" farmer has been attracted by an advertisement setting forth the attractiveness of a small farm with its fine old trees, its running brook, its views, etc.

At present there are evidences of a great unrest among city dwellers, and more than half of those who openly express it by the fact of their application here belong to the class that may be expected to fail on a farm.

We can tell approximately whether our purchasers are likely to make a success of their venture, for it is dependent on their own willingness to work and in part on their judgment as to methods of work. Farming is a business, and like any other it has to be attended to.

For eight to ten years there has been an increasing migration of city folk to the country. During the war, while it fell off noticeably, it still was strong. But then the high cost of farm labor detracted from the advantages of farm life. Sensible men hesitated to go back to the country when labor commanded such exorbitant wages. It is now back again to normal, that is, it is possible to get a good farm hand for about $20 a month.

The proof of this is that there is reported a full contingent among the harvest hands who work in the country from Florida to the Canadian line.

Before You Decide on a Farm Find Out What Kind of a Farm You Want

BUT while the farmer born and bred takes into consideration these and other things, while he is looking for a good farm, stocked with animals and machinery, and with growing crops, for what we may term a "civilized" piece of property, his city neighbor is likely to put too much stress on rumor of what others have done. He has heard that modest fortunes have been made out of a fruit orchard and out of a poultry run and asks himself if he hadn't as good a chance provided he puts his savings into such a thing.

I don't say that he hasn't; nobody can minimize what real honest work may accomplish, but I do say there have been lots of failures in just such pseudo farms. On the other hand, I am acquainted with a man who went from Manhattan to an outlying part of Staten Island, took up a piece of unimproved land, without even a road leading to it, started a poultry farm and almost at once reaped big profits. He refused this fall $60,000 for his poultry farm which he started in 1914.

Farming Is a Business and Must Be So Considered

THE appeal of the farm in these days is based on something more than sentiment. Farming is not a haphazard affair, for it is now done by clever agriculturists. To succeed in it demands modern business methods and scientific management. The farmer who applies these need not fear to be looked on patronizingly by the city man.

Moreover, besides possible prosperity there are changes in farm life that render it far more attractive than it used to be. There is little need to list these changes, for everybody who has gone for his "two weeks" to the country within the last decade knows what they are. The automobile, the rural free delivery, the parcels post, the telephone, the movies, the phonograph and the radio have all contributed to making life on the farm not merely endurable but highly agreeable.

There are still to be had choice farms in the East that have been permitted to lie idle. These "abandoned" farms are getting better prices than were paid for them a few years ago, because the purchaser now has the intention of running it as a farm and not merely as a summer residence. There are a good many, however, in Connecticut and Massachusetts and a few in northern New York that may be had at a bargain whether the city purchaser buys for entire year service or summer retreat.

In the past year every agent for the sale of farm lands has been flooded with inquiries. One such received 250,000 in that period and more than one-half of them came from residents of New York City.

IN SPITE OF THE FORTUNE TELLER

BY H. LOUIS REYBOLD

WHEN Betty Peyton consented to play the fortune teller at Mrs. Esmond-Ashley's annual garden fete she did so under the supposition that it would be an easy way of passing the time at an affair where she knew nobody and would, in a way, be a means of doing her hostess a favor in return for the recent great kindness done her.

As she regarded herself in the mirror after an hour's application of all she had learned in the amateur theatricals which had served to pass so many hours of the summers spent in the hills at Simla, she assured herself that her dearest friend would never recognize her. And it would have indeed been difficult to detect beneath the burnt umber complexion, swarthy brows, gaudy turban and oriental draperies of the image which confronted her the Anglo-Saxon fairness and winsome charm of Betty Peyton.

"You're simply perfect, my dear!" Mrs. Esmond-Ashley's voice was all admiration. "Your booth is down by the rhododendrons—and remember, you are supposed to be the real article. After advertising that unreliable Hindu woman as my leading card, I simply dare not go back on it. Incidentally, I honestly think you look more genuine than she does!"

During the early part of the evening, custom was very brisk, and Betty had her hands full, literally and figuratively, with palms, both masculine and feminine, demanding to be read. Then, as the liquid notes of the Hawaiian quartet floated out on the lantern-illuminated air, the guests drifted away to listen, and Betty was left alone, resting a dusky hand and gazing pensively out into the sweet-scented night as one who peers into a future too dim to decipher.

She was wondering why it was that she and Paul Brighton could not have met naturally without being thrown at each other's heads since childhood. Gossip, the length and breadth of India, she told herself bitterly, had coupled their names together until no doubt he felt the same aversion to her that she did to him. And all because their fathers, closely associated for years, had made so evident their wish to see their children wed one another.

It was when she learned that Paul, now Capt. Brighton, was to be transferred to the same post as her father, that Betty made up her mind to run away, and writing to her aunt in America, whom she had never seen, opened the opportunity for the invitation to spend the summer at the latter's country home.

Suddenly, breaking in upon her meditations, a tall figure advanced through the shrubbery and, throwing himself down on the cushions before her, silently held out his hand. As he did so, the swaying lantern above her shone on his lifted face. Thunderstruck, she nearly uttered a cry, then, with great effort, checked herself. It was Paul.

What was he doing here? Would he recognize her? No, that was absurd, and presumably her aunt would not disclose her identity, at least until after the festivities. These thoughts flashed through her mind as she bent above his palm.

Then she had an inspiration. Of all the people she knew, Capt. Brighton, after his years in India, might have some faith in the occult.

Slowly she began, in hesitating, broken patois. "The sahib—he sail from Kurachi? Yes—I see it here. Also, he must beware ver' light lady: must be careful. Light ladies ver' bad for this sahib—bring bad luck, bad fortune, sickness, death, oh, ev'thing. Much better think on dark ladies—ver' dark."

She hoped that in the semi-darkness he did not observe her sudden pause as she recalled the fact that her hostess's daughter Joan was of an exceeding darkness, and Mrs. Esmond-Ashley might naturally not wish to be considered as making a bid for attention to her daughter through the medium of a fortune teller at her own garden party.

But her patron merely gave a grave "Thank you," and, rising, went his way, leaving Betty wondering how much faith he had in her abilities as a seeress.

That night Mrs. Esmond-Ashley congratulated Betty. "You were a tremendous hit—and everybody believed you real. Why Capt. Paul Brighton, just arrived from India on a mission in which my husband is concerned, says he has seen hundreds like you sitting on the road to Delhi. Incidentally, he's coming to tea tomorrow, and between you and me, I believe he's a bit gone on Joan!"

The following afternoon Betty, in her own character, met quite informally the man between whom and herself she had endeavored to put several continents. They had shaken hands quite casually, while he remarked with calmness that he had known her for many years. Then he had turned trained a lock of hair over his forehead in Napoleon's manner, and until his later years the resemblance was strong enough to attract attention.

"Several books about Napoleon, written by members of his staff, owed their origin to him. If one of his editors was incautious enough to talk about Napoleon in the Chief's presence, he was forthwith ordered to drop everything else and write a book."

Northcliffe died, in what should be the prime of life. There is no need to speculate as to the "mysterious" cause of his death, when one learns of his eating habits. The writer above quoted says:

"Northcliffe was a tremendous eater. He was, as everybody knows, a big man, and he ate and drank in proportion to his size. Everything. It was nothing unusual for him to drink a quart and a half of light wines in the evening, though he was never affected by drinks of any sort; he drank, too, enormous quantities of soda water; and his enormous cigars, made specially in Germany of whatever tobacco-ersatz was used in Germany before the war, were too stiff for any other man on earth."

"As a man eateth so is he."

How many lives are cut short by gross violations of the laws of health.

And then, it is sometimes called a "mysterious dispensation of Providence."

What a ghastly joke.

Bacteria

BACTERIA are not the cause, but an effect of disease. Remember, further, that there is no such thing as an infectious disease, as usually understood. That is to say, a disease that may be transferred from one person to another without physical contact. Neither smallpox, nor cholera, nor yellow fever, nor any other disease, is infectious, in this sense, any more than seasickness. You might as well say that seasickness is infectious, because a large number of people will be similarly and simultaneously affected. A disease breaks out when the conditions are favorable for that disease, just as a plant disease will appear simultaneously over a wide area and as mysteriously disappear. Disease affects only those people whose blood forms a suitable culture medium for the disease—in other words, whose blood is impure. Consequently, those who have pure blood are safe in any epidemic, and all methods of quarantine are not only expensive and annoying, but useless.

Of course, this is heresy, in the view of a great majority of the medical profession. But then the doctors have been brought up in the colleges to believe certain things, and they have neither the courage nor the originality to break away from those teachings, even when they begin to doubt them, just as the graduates of religious colleges, although they often do not believe any more in what they preach, fear to come out boldly and say so, because they would not know which way to turn for a living.

Here and there a regular physician comes forth and hurls his defi at the monster of medical superstition, but such men are, unfortunately, rare, although their ranks are likely to see a rapid increase in the near future. Most of the physicians will as slavishly take up any prevailing medical fad that is put forth by some big bug of the medical fraternity, as the women will adopt any absurd costume that comes from Paris, and is declared to be the mode, although it may be originated with some cocotte whom they wouldn't recognize on the street.

When will doctors and laymen begin to think for themselves?

Gas

FOLLOWING is from "Foods and Chemicals," by V. G. Rocine:

"When the stomach is acid, some foods will be converted into gas, causing disturbances of some kind. Some of these gases will pass up into the brain and may produce paralytic ailments. It may act upon the cerebellum, so that it cannot perform its function. If that gas is pressing upon the walls of the stomach, the stomach cannot digest food. It is impossible for the stomach to digest food so long as there is gas in the stomach.

"The stomach has a certain movement, called peristalsis. Gas in the stomach presses, so that the stomach cannot move, cannot digest food, cannot perform its peristalsis movement, cannot pour its gastric juice over the foods. The food is left undigested. You feel a burning in the stomach, at such a time; or, perhaps, you feel as if you had a stone in your stomach. You feel uneasy, uncomfortable, or bloated. You feel as if there is nothing to live for. . . .

"When there is gas in the stomach, eat no food until that gas is neutralized. Gas is the meanest thing a patient has to fight. I have come to the conclusion that about 70

The Story of California—

A LITTLE HISTORY OF A BIG STATE

BY ROCKWELL D. HUNT, Ph.D.
(ILLUSTRATIONS BY BARNDOLLAR)

ANNOUNCEMENT

This is the first installment of a brief but illuminating history of California by Rockwell D. Hunt, Ph.D., dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences of the University of Southern California and for the past six years president of the Historical Society of Southern California. Dean Hunt is California born and bred. His father, D. R. Hunt arrived in California in 1850, via "the Isthmus;" his mother in 1854, "across the plains." In his long experience as an educator he has stressed the teaching of California history and he has produced a formidable shelf of important historical works among which are "The Genesis of California's First Constitution, 1846-1849," (Johns Hopkins Studies, 1895;) "Legal Status of California, 1846-1849," (Annals American Academy, 1898;) "California the Golden" (Silver, Burdett & Co., 1911,) and numerous articles in the Overland Monthly, Grizzly Bear, Los Angeles Times and other publications. The series will contain ten articles and will appear weekly in The Times Illustrated Magazine. While this outline is brief, it is presented in the hope that, by reason of the numerous references given, it will serve as a valuable stimulus to the further study of California's unique and romantic history.—[Editor.

GEOGRAPHY OF CALIFORNIA
CHAPTER I

GREAT VARIETY OF PHYSICAL FEATURES—The geography of California is remarkably varied and intensely interesting. Within the bounds of this one State are to be found almost all kinds of physical features known to man. In an automobile ride from the great valley to the mountain heights one may pass through every variety of climate, from the heated subtropical to the frozen arctic in the course of a few brief hours.

To explain the wide variation of heat and cold, the heavy rains in some localities and the severe drought in others, we must look to the influences of ocean, winds and mountain walls.

California's Boundaries—The only great natural features forming boundaries to California are the Pacific Ocean on the west, giving the State a wonderful coast line of nearly 1000 miles, and the Colorado River at the extreme southeast, supplying the water that has transformed Imperial Valley from a desert waste to a rich garden spot.

The eastern boundary extends southward along the 120th parallel of west longitude to Lake Tahoe, thence in a southeasterly direction to the Colorado River. For much of this distance it runs along the summit of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, roughly speaking; but the southeastern part af California includes a wide strip of country, largely desert by nature, lying east of the Sierras and belonging, in the geographical sense, to Nevada. The northern boundary is a straight line fixed at 42 deg. north latitude.

Seven Natural Divisions—The surface of California falls naturally into seven distinct regions.* These are: (1) the lofty range of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, with a total length of 400 miles and a width that averages fifty miles; (2) the Great Sacramento-San Joaquin Valley, lying in the very heart of California, and being one of the most productive valleys in the world; (3) the coast ranges of mountains, lying between the great valley and the Pacific Ocean and extending, with complex forms and many interruptions, from the Oregon boundary to Southern California; (4) Southern California, or that portion of the State lying south of the San Joaquin Valley and separated from it by the Tehachapi Mountains; (5) Klamath Mountain region, a very mountainous area in the northwestern part of California; (6) the Volcanic Plateau region, in the northeastern part of the State, which is a part of one of the greatest lava floods in the world, covering Eastern Oregon, Eastern Washington, Southern Idaho, Northern Nevada and Northeastern California; and (7) the great basin province, occupying the extreme eastern and the southeastern portion of the State, in all about one-third of its total area, with many depressions and many mountain ranges but entirely without external drainage.

Climate—Almost every kind of climate to be found anywhere on the globe may be found somewhere in California. On the whole, however, the State, especially the portion that sustains a dense population, is famous for its fine climate.

Rain is very rare during the summer months, except that which comes with the mountain thunder storms. The rainfall, not sufficient in some places to produce good crops, is of very great importance to the State; even the winter snows and the summer thunder storms of the High Sierras are more and more depended on to contribute to the water supply so much needed for irrigation of wide areas of fertile but dry land.

Natural Parks—A marvel of nature is the Yosemite Valley, situated in the Yosemite National Park, in the eastern part of California. Thousands of visitors gaze each year upon the wonders of Yosemite. Other national parks in the State are the Sequoia and the General Grant, in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, which will preserve the famous Big Trees for later generations, and Muir Woods, in the Coast Range, with redwoods of matchless beauty. Another spot of excelling natural beauty that has been preserved from destruction by the State is the Big Basin in the Santa Cruz Mountains, with its towering and majestic redwoods.

Because of its endless variety of physical features, the perpetual charm of its scenery and the fame of its climate California is becoming more and more every year the playground of the world.

THE CALIFORNIA INDIANS

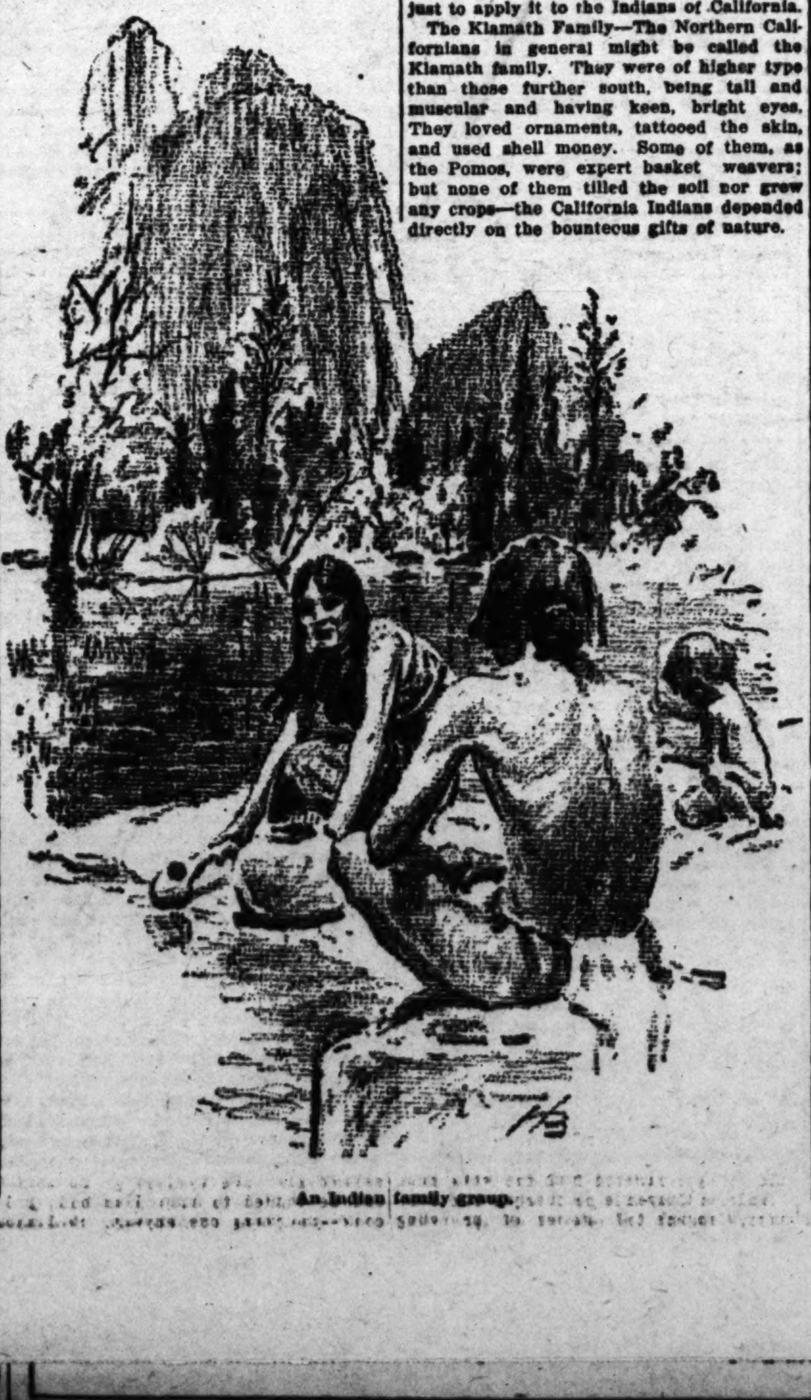
Long before the coming of the white man the hills and valleys of what we now know as the State of California were peopled perhaps more densely with Indians than any like area of North America.

Distinctions From Eastern Indians—These California Indians, while without doubt related in some way to the numerous Indian tribes of the entire continent, were unlike the Nevada or the Arizona Indians, and especially the more distant and Atlantic tribes, in several respects. They had no tradition of the "Great Spirit," and among them the idea of the "Happy Hunting Ground" was lacking—in this balmy climate they did not know the fierce joy of the Dakota hunter but thought more of ease and luxury. They were not naturally warlike, although some mountain tribes, such as the Klamaths and the Siskiyous, were very brave fighters when once aroused. They did not have the copper color of the noble red man, nor his haughty, eaglelike features. They did not scalp their victims, nor was the pipe of peace generally known among them.

Tribal Relations—The tribal bonds of the California Indians were very loose; in fact, many of their bands can hardly be spoken of as tribes at all. These bands were without the tie of a common language; there were Indian tongues by the score, thus it is said that there were as many as nineteen languages in use around the San Francisco Bay district. The languages were so different from each other that Indians from one tribal band could not understand the speech of those belonging to another, even though separated by only a few miles. Nevertheless all these simple people belonged to the great family of North American Indians.

"Diggers" an Incorrect Name—It is wrong to call the California Indians "Diggers," as many have done. This term was first used, very likely, in the case of some root-eating tribes of the Rocky Mountain region; it later became a term of reproach, meaning something low and degrading, and it is unjust to apply it to the Indians of California.

The Klamath Family—The Northern Californians in general might be called the Klamath family. They were of higher type than those further south, being tall and muscular and having keen, bright eyes. They loved ornaments, tattooed the skin, and used shell money. Some of them, as the Pomos, were expert basket weavers; but none of them tilled the soil nor grew any crops—the California Indians depended directly on the bounteous gifts of nature.



An Indian family group.

Indians of Central California—The Indian bands living in the central part of California were of very low grade. They we proverbially lazy, having no regular form o industry and no ambition for culture of an kind. Their chief desire seemed to be t have their stomachs filled with the leas possible exertion so that they might spen their time "lying stretched out upon th ground, doing absolutely nothing, roamin about from hut to hut, playing, dancing o sleeping." Prominent among the Centr Californians were the Tehamas, the Ukiah and the Petalumas.

Indians of the South—The Indians o Southern California, while higher in cultur than those of the Great Valley just nort of them, were of lower type—with the e ception of the Yumas, the Island and th Santa Barbara Channel Indians—than thos of the northern part of California. The took extreme delight in dancing, every kin of occasion was celebrated by a danc which often lasted for days and nights t gether.

Food for the Indians—Nature in Ca fornia was very generous in supplying great variety of foods that would suppo life; then why should the Indians exe themselves to cultivate the soil, even such a thought had occurred to their du minds?

The most important food was vegetabl and this included leaves, roots, twigs, seed grasses, nuts and berries. The acorn d serves special mention because it was great staple. Acorns were dried, th ground into coarse powder or meal, soak for several hours in the sand to drain o the bitter taste, then made into bread rude cakes. Pine nuts were a great f vorite. Wild oats, alfilerilla and clov were freely eaten, as were likewise ma kinds of greens.

But the Indians also ate many forms animal life. Shell fish were devoured vast quantities, many varieties of fish w caught with hooks and snares, and variet of game without number were used food, for California has always been a h ter's paradise. Quantities of grasshopp were dried and eaten, young yellow jack were considered a delicacy; and then o should not forget gophers, lizards, snak rats, mice, skunks, coyotes and worms a insects of numerous varieties. Alm every living thing on which they could their hands served them as food, includi many of the best articles of diet. But th laziness was often so great as to ma hunting and fishing a burden; so it c easily be understood what joy reigned wi a dead whale was washed ashore.

Indians at Home—Most of the Califor Indians dwelt in queer little houses cal wikiups, usually made of long wil boughs driven into the ground, the up ends being drawn together and tied w thongs, the whole then being covered w grass thatch. A large number of wiki formed an Indian village, or rancheria. village was not complete without a tem cal, or assembly chamber, which also ser as medicine room and dance hall.

The Indian mother was chief toiler. was she that gathered and prepared food, became skilled in tanning deer sk weaving baskets, and meeting all the mands of her husband and lord.

Clothing was very scanty; indeed, it not at all uncommon for the men and c dren to go without any clothing at all dur the warm summer months. But where ments were needed for protection or desi for ceremonials, the otter or deer skin not lacking, while the beautiful plumag native birds made attractive ornaments.

Marriage was a very simple cerem more a matter of business than of se ment. The rich men had first choice brides because they could pay the m shell money. Later on, if the husb wished a divorce, he had only to say, "I you aside," and the thing was done.

Myths and Legends—It would be a take to think the California Indians ha religion. It is true their religious bel were very crude, with a strong mixtur superstition; but they were rich in my and legends, and a spirit world see quite real to them. Stories of the crea of man, of the flood, of the coming of of the prowess of coyote and eagle, and merous other legends were kept alive f generation to generation by tradition.

per cent of all diseases are caused by gas and acidity in the stomach. The intestines will stand still; they cannot act; there is no peristalsis in the stomach, when there is gas pressing in every direction. That gas goes into the nerves, into the brain and the patient feels as though he was drunk. He does not have control of the faculties and nerves. He cannot concentrate. You will live longer, become more efficient, by neutralizing intestinal gases.

"The little baby suffers from gas, and gray hair does not escape it. Even the growing youth is sometimes a factory of gas. Doctors usually have a hard fight against gas, even if they do not know that it is gas. The cause of indigestion, heart disease, gout, rheumatism, neuritis, is gas and acidity. That weak brain, that lack of concentration, weak memory, that weak sexual system, has its origin in gas and acidity."

A Precocious Youth

"Enterprising newspaper managers who are seeking an editor will do well to put on their waiting list the name of Willmore Kendall, Jr., 13 years old, who matriculated at Northwestern University in the freshman class today, the youngest student ever admitted to the great institution. Young Kendall, who is the son of a Methodist preacher of Mangum, Okla., successfully passed all tests. His father graduated from Northwestern in 1912. A special dispensation by the university set aside the rule which forbids accepting any student under 16.

"Willmore is considered one of the most brilliant students in the history of the university. At the age of 2½ years he knew his letters, and was able to read at 3. His father is blind and the baby read newspapers and books to him. He skipped the seventh grade in grammar school and did a four-year high school course in three years. He entered Mangum High School when he was 9 years old. His parents resent the intimation that he is a 'prodigy.' They explain that he is an ordinary, clear headed, ambitious boy who has devoted his attention to the work in hand.

"Willmore's life ambition is to be a newspaper man, and he will lay out his whole course of study with that end in view."

It is a question of whether this boy is supernormal, or whether the average youth is subnormal. We do not know what might be accomplished by rational training of the human race, from infancy.

However, when a child displays precocious mental ability, it should not be urged forward, but rather held back, and given plenty of outdoor exercise, with plain food.

Prizes for "Cures"

FOLLOWING dispatch from Washington was recently published:

"Lure of a million dollar reward is held out in a bill introduced in the House today, to physicians and scientists of the world who discover and give to humanity specific cures for half a dozen prevalent diseases which have baffled doctors and surgeons sincethe advent of medical science.

"The author of the bill is Representative Elliott W. Sproul of Chicago. Under the terms of the measure $1,000,000 would be paid in ten annual installments to any one who finds a successful cure for tuberculosis, cancer, pneumonia, paralysis, epilepsy or dementia praecox (mental disease.)

"Systems of treatment, such as open air and diet for tuberculosis patients would not be considered, Mr. Sproul said. The cure must be specific, such as a serum, or something that definitely kills the germ of the particular disease or will restore the impaired organs to normality."

Cures of these diseases by natural methods are being made, every day, but such cures are barred.

Drugs

THE growth of the drug industry in the United States is one of the most miraculous of the romance of commerce. Thirty years ago the suffering American had about 2600 remedies at his disposal. Now he, or his physician, can have choice among more than 45,000.

A statement by the Department of Commerce shows that more than $400,000,000 worth of drug products were manufactured in the United States during 1921.

None of these drugs cure and all of them are more or less poisonous and harmful. They relieve pain—which is a warning signal—and suppress symptoms.

An immense amount of money is invested in the manufacture and sale of drugs. Enterprising salesmen call on physicians, and induce them to try new preparations that have been advertised in "ethical" medical journals.

Paul H. DeKruif, M.D., writes in an eastern magazine:

"Doctors, in general, are just as gullible as laymen. The ailing female listens to and believes in the alluring promises of an advertised nostrum. The up and coming young physician, eager to keep abreast of the march of science, is prone to harken to the clever blandishments of drug manufacturers, who flatter him by appealing to

Palm Canyon—Our Newest National Park

BY HELEN RING ROBINSON

Andreas farm at the "open season" for artists.

OFFICIALLY, Palm Canyon National Park, our newest national reserve, created recently by act of Congress, is not a park at all, but a "Monument."

Indeed, when compared with other such national reserves, it is merely a park in miniature. A duodecimo edition of only 1600 acres. But with more personality to the acre than any other of our twenty national parks. And it's only five hours by motor from Los Angeles.

It is a place of singular contrasts. Gazing off from the entrance to the Monument in the direction from which the traveler came, he sees an illimitable gray wrinkled waste of sand—the "Hell" of the prospectors of the 90's; yet the sound of rushing white mountain streams is in his ears and beside him, perhaps, is a world famous botanist from Switzerland come to study the unique lora of the region. Very likely a score of Jeweled humming-birds are flickering above is head, but, should he try to peer into one f their thimble-nests, he may need a pair f pinchers to pull thorns out of his ankles —for the humming-bird nests are hung on holla, most cantankerous of desert cacti.

Then the visitor mounts a few steps furher, toward the summit of the ridge and, acing westward—but let the director of the ational Park Service tell the story:

"He stands transfixed, gripped by the cene, and as unable to express himself as f he were standing on the rim of the Grand anyon of the Colorado."

Winding down from the San Jacinto eights he sees a long priestly procession f palms, waving Hosannas. On both sides f a tortuous mountain stream they seem to ravel, their feet in the water and their eads in the sun. The thin violet light hich is the characteristic tone of the esert is cut across by sharp indigo hadows. There is something sacramental n the beauty of the scene, something myscal in its charm.

That part of the Colorado Desert in outhern California which includes the villge of Palm Springs and is variously called Our Araby" or "The Valley of the Sun" retches out like a giant hand with its five ngers reaching toward the San Jacinto ountains. Three of the fingers are named ndreas, Murray and Palm Canyons, Palm anyon being the "ring finger." These ree canyons, with their desert approaches, rm the new national park.

ere Flourishes One of the Few Native merican Palms (Washingtonia Filifera)

ALM CANYON, the best known of the three and the most impressive, is not ally a canyon but a pass, some ten miles ng, once a favorite trail of Indians in their urneys to the sea. It lies about eight les west of Palm Springs on a fair dirt ad. The procession of Palms is its most stinctive feature and, indeed, it was chiefto preserve these, one of the few remain natural growths of the native American lm (Washingtonia filifera) descended m the era of the mammoth and the dinour, that public spirited men and women Los Angeles and Riverside have devoted ir time and money for several years past forwarding the project of this new nation safety zone for palms and flowers and d animal life.

hey have succeeded none too soon. Even while the bill creating the monument was passing the United States Senate twenty of the great palms in the Canyon were burned by vandals while more and more the defacing shacks and general slatterny of Tincandom have profaned its sanctities. Like a torrent of oaths in the New Jerusalem.

Palm Creek flows through the whole length of the pass. Now it sparkles in the shade of the palms, now it flashes in open sunny places. Narrow trails cross and recross the stream, hiding behind logs and chaparral, teasing and beckoning. What matter if the tramper or rider does grow weary? Are there not two warm sulphur pools, encased with stone slabs by the "Hermit of Palm Canyon," well hidden away in the bracken? A plunge into one of these soft pools, while a companion keeps guard in the leafy "dressing room"—and no luxurious Roman or Turkish bath was ever more invigorating.

Andreas Canyon a Vividly Picturesque Gap in the Earth

THREE miles nearer Palm Springs is Andreas Canyon, not so distinctive as Palm Canyon and its hieratic Procession of Palms, but vividly picturesque with its uptilted red rocks, its tumbling stream, and its strange groupings of ancient palms, their "petticoats" of straw-colored fans reaching to their ankles. Standing in twilight circles they recall the tree-circled "gloriettas" of New Mexico where vanished Indians once held their weird nature dances.

Were these palm circles once planted for a like purpose? Maybe. At least there are many signs in Andreas Canyon of Indian habitation. There are the "gossip-holes" close to the entrance of the canyon, where Indian women used to grind the family mesquite beans and chia seeds while exchanging Coahuilla news and small talk. Many jars and other relics of the red man have been found in caves among the red rocks while broken bits of an old adobe wall, overgrown with wild grapes, are said to be the remains of a winery where old Chief Andreas once found very profitable use for certain receipts bartered from the white man.

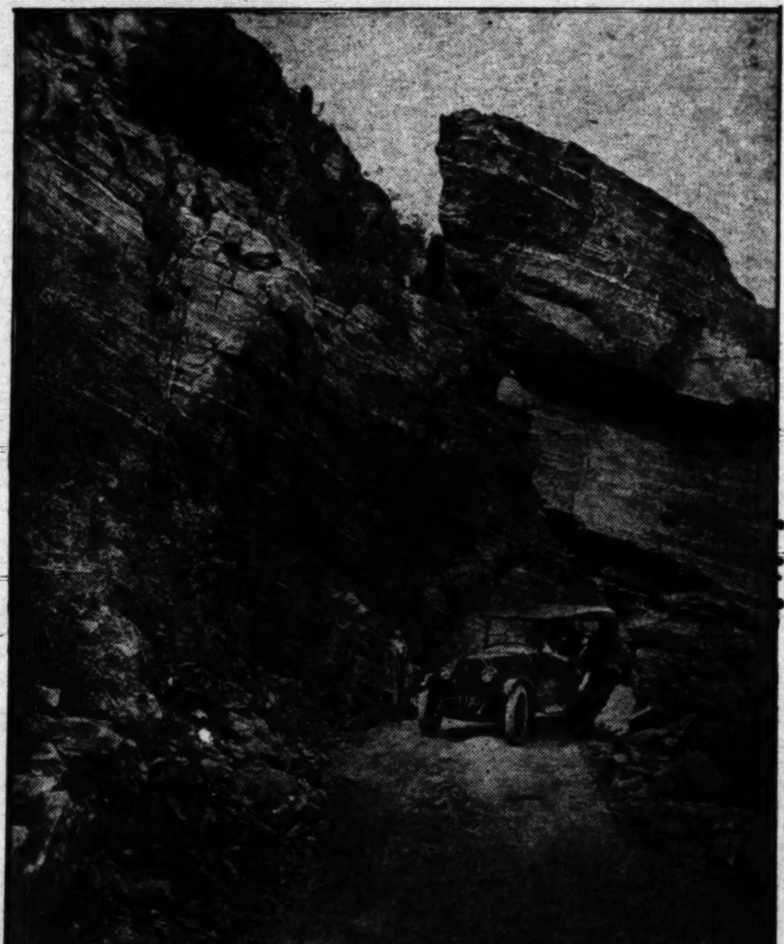
Andreas Canyon is peculiarly a bird sanctuary, Campers tell stories of pr owling black panthers and hikers through the canyon are often warned that it is "plumb full of rattlesnakes."

Courageous Lady in Knickers Slays Mr. Rattler With a Rock

I NEVR saw one though I have frequently picnicked there. Doubtless the wise hiker will take a heavy-headed walking stick with him for emergencies, though the lady from Los Angeles who wears plaid knickers managed her emergency very well without one. She was daringly climbing one of the smooth, almost perpendicular cliffs toward the summit of the canyon, slowly lifting herself from toe-hole to toe-hole, and had almost gained the top. She reached out her right hand to clutch a projecting piece of rock, meaning with its help to swing herself to the top. The piece of rock broke in her hand. "R-r-r-h!" At the same moment she heard that petulant challenge and saw a rattler, coiled on the edge of the cliff, ready to strike. But the lady who wears plaid knickers never faltered for a moment. Digging her feet more firmly into the toe-holes and clinging with her left hand to a projecting shrub, she swung the right hand around, still clutching the piece of stone, and struck the rampant rattler in exactly the right place, just where he used to live. Yes, that's what she says.

Murray Canyon, lying between Palm and Andreas, is less traveled and less picturesque than the other two, but it has its own peculiar charm and its winding passages among rough hills make it a favorite resort for game from the mountain solitudes, including occasional big horn sheep.

Two years ago I met, far up in the canyon, a Californian in distress, a man who hunted game with his camera but had left it two unhappy miles away when he came upon a tiny big-horn lamb (if that's the way to call it) feeding with its mother. The camera man had hobbled the lamb with his silk handkerchief, and would I watch the little beggar, he asked, while he ran down to the place where he had left his camera? "Where is the mother?" I inquired. "Oh, watching somewhere from the rocks," he assured me. She wouldn't go far away—and he wanted to snap them both, if he could—the young one, anyway. So I acted as nurse for the infant and it was only after I was alone with it in the wilds that I began to wonder about the habits of father big-horns. Anyway, my charge was a gallant little sport, never bla-a-a-ing once while we waited together.



At the gateway to Palm Lawn.

Water in These Canyons Reserved for Irrigation for Indians

MUCH of the land included in the new monument belonged to the Agua Caliente Indians that once roamed over this region. Some of it has already been purchased from them by the men back of the park project, who have also arranged to provide the Secretary of the Interior with sufficient funds for the purchase of the remainder of the Indian holdings in the park. The water in the three canyons is reserved to the Indians, who use it in irrigating their scrawny farms down in the Valley of the Sun, while they themselves have for many years past been gathered into reservation close to Palm Springs.

Here during the fig season, which comes earlier to Our Araby than anywhere else in California, you may hear "the chimes of Palm Springs." Dolores rings them with her foot, while her hands are busy fashioning her famous baskets. For the "chimes" are five gallon oil cans, with stones inside, rigged up in the big fig trees with a bell rope attachment which the basket maker deftly manipulates to frighten the robber birds away.

The natural center for visitors to the monument is Palm Springs, a fragment of the Great Desert that wears vine leaves in its hair.

The village of Palm Springs, less than five hours from Los Angeles, is quite as distinctive in its way as is Palm Canyon. To be sure the woman from Boston and the man from Des Moines, visiting it for the first time, find something hauntingly familiar about the place and its surroundings. Strange memories of gorgeous Queens of Sheba and amorous desert sheiks, the heavy padding of camels over Saharan wastes, wadis of Palestine and Biskra and Bedouin adlibis for our own western outlaw, Billy-Be-Damned.

The Movies Have Used This Spot for All Sorts of Desert Scenes

THE woman from Boston and the man from Des Moines never visited Biskra or a Palestine wadi or Saharan sands and yet—and yet—Ah! At last they have it. Those palm-loved pools, those wrinkled, illimitable gray wastes of sand—they have known them all before in the movies!

Palm Springs, with vine-leaves in its hair, the wrinkled sands that surround it, windy Seven Palms and Andreas and Palm Canyons have long been favorite resorts for film directors and several of the best known oriental screen plays have been staged there. Indeed, one of the favorite winter sports of visitors to the Valley of the Sun is to follow the movie players round "on location."

But Palm Springs is no mere upstart movie town. It has a history reaching back forty years and more, even if those enthusiasts err who claim to find in Our Araby dim traces of the footprintes of the padres.

Desert trails lead from it to a score of near or more distant "ghost cities," Palm Dale and the others. Abandoned towns, some laid out by irrigation dreamers and smothered by the desert, others with mining cabins and rusted machinery telling of "the days of old, the days of gold."

Yes. Palm Springs "dates" all right. And, to judge from stories told of the good old days, its pioneers used to feed on raw cactus. Quaint stories of prickly feuds and barbed wire barriers. I'd gladly tell some of them here, only I love to visit Palm Springs, with its winter days, suave as honey, where some of the barbed-wire feudists still linger. And I am never conscious of great courage till the occasion for it is past.

Gone are the good old days. Even those later good old easy financial days when a Palm Springs hostelry advertised, "Beds 50 cents. Wives free." Prices are higher nowadays, and you must pay for that oriental feel and those big round desert stars and those winter days, suave as honey. But whatever you pay those honey-suave airs are worth it.

And there is always the chargeless open road and auto tents and the glorified smell of bacon sizzling over a camp fire.

his scientific acumen and his desire to progress. So the doctor is bombarded incessantly by tons of advertising literature. This comes to him from drug venders, who make a great noise of being 'ethical.' By ethical they mean they advertise only to doctors and not to the public."

Old and experienced physicians are gradually dropping the use of drugs. It is the young fellows, recently out of college, who are always ready to "give something" to cure disease, not understanding the great truth that a man cannot get well by "taking" or "doing" something, but only by ceasing to take and do that which makes him sick.

Begging

TH national committee on vagrancy and begging organized in New York City to deal with the mendicancy problem on a nation-wide basis, is planning a campaign against beggars and peddlers who go to and from their work in automobiles, who wear fur coats and diamonds in their hours of ease, who have country homes and town houses, who have fat bank accounts and well-stocked cellars.

When I first come to the United States, 50 years ago, a white man would have been insulted if you offered him a tip. Now he is likely to feel insulted if you don't.

We are becoming a nation of beggars—legitimate and illegitimate beggars. Some begging takes the form of "tag days" and "drives," which are a species of charitable holdup. Sometimes the bulk of the contributions go to the deserving—and sometimes they don't.

The best form of charity is that which seeks out the needy, among your acquaintances, or in your neighborhood. That is better than writing a check, or giving a "V" to get rid of people, or because you are ashamed not to give.

Babies in Summer

NO WONDER babies often cry, in summer, when they are overclothed and fed overheating, acid-forming foods.

Following is by Dr. Marie R. Simonson in Health Talks:

"Hot weather is on, and thousands of infants in our State will die; not from the effects of the heat, but through improper diet, too heavy clothing and other errors in their care.

"On awakening in the morning give the baby a quick rub with your hands, using cold water.

"Clean its mouth and teeth if it has any, using only water.

"Dress, and feed its milk.

"The dress should consist of one loose garment, besides its diaper which should be as light as possible.

"Part of the day let baby roll around naked, you may put a rubber sheet on the bed or floor and over that a soft blanket.

"In the middle of the forenoon, give a feeding of fruit juice, of which oranges is the best; but when they are scarce you may substitute fresh grape juice (not canned or cooked,) prune, peach, pineapple or any other good fruit juice. If it must be sweetened use honey, as sugar is highly injurious.

"At noon give a quick cool bath and its dinner of milk, let it be quiet and have its nap.

"In the middle of the afternoon give a feeding of fruit juice, and at 6 o'clock its supper of milk.

"Before putting to bed give a bath, and if it has to be fed, give a little fruit juice.

"When baby appears thirsty give a drink of cool water, not cold.

"The mother must see that she is in perfect health; avoiding food that causes auto-intoxication; living principally on uncooked fruits and vegetables, attending strictly to her baths and exercise.

"Never feed baby on artificial foods. If the mother cannot nurse her baby give it fresh cow's milk, and the fruit juices as I have directed above."

CREAM OF BRAN
PHOSPHO with Agar-Agar
An Ideal Corrective
Phospho Cream of Bran with Agar-Agar, unlike most brans, has a real nutritive value. In its preparation we use only the inner bran from selected wheat. This inner bran is rich in natural oil itself and aids in digestion and elimination. When combined with Agar-Agar, a marine gelatin, it becomes even more beneficial in its action. Agar-Agar is not a drug. It is natural sea gelatin, recommended and endorsed by dieticians the world over, as one of the most natural aids in the correction of constipation.
Phospho Cream of Bran with Agar-Agar may be eaten uncooked. Many persons like it just as it comes in the package, eating it with fresh fruit or fresh fruit and cream. It has been well and favorably known in Southern California for the last 20 years.
You Can Try a Package at Our Expense.
Send us your order for two one-lb. packages, costing you $1.50. Use one and if you do not like it, return the other and we will refund the price of both. 6 packages for $4, 12 for $7.50. Postpaid anywhere in the U. S. Order on the coupon below.

MUSHAM'S ESSAY

BY WILL PAYNE

[illegible] into the easy chair by the [illegible] and inviting him to lay off his overcoat.

"'S no matter," Musham grumbled back, meaning the coat, and folded his lank person into the chair, glowering. There was a curious turmoil of anger, disgust, and something else inside him.

The bedroom door flew inward, wide open, and a woman in a rose colored kimono flitted in, white teeth and blue eyes flashing, a dimple in either cheek. Her wavy hair was the color of cornsilk. If there was art in the pink of her cheeks it was good art. A faint tan underlay the pink, as though some of the gold pigment of her hair had lightly dusted down upon her cheeks. Floating to the easy chair, she extended a round, white arm and shapely hand; and when Musham stood up, redder than common and frowning, to shake her hand ungraciously, she laid the tip of her tongue to the edge of her teeth in a little, merry, derisive bubble of laughter, saying:

"You know you can't help shaking hands with me, much as you want to!"

Musham was 61; had two sons and a daughter already married, and three grandchildren. All his abstemious, conscientious life—largely spent in stocking his brain with dry points of patent law—he had walked in the straight and narrow path in respect of such glowing objects as now confronted him. That he should ever walk otherwise was as unthinkable as flying without wings. Yet in spite of himself he acknowledged the pull. She sparkled with vitality. It was beautiful to see her move or even stand—like watching a bird of paradise flit and preen.

All through this wretched affair, along with disgust and anger, his role of emissary carried a certain immortal advantage which he sometimes—secretly and in a rather startled way—acknowledged to himself. That is, it enabled him, even while reprobating her, to watch the fascinating play that she staged before him—the play of herself. She bubbled with life and incarnated the grace and beauty for which the unregenerate heart of man will ever thirst; and, in spite of himself, the old, rigidly upright, dusty wayfarer did furtively dip his cup in the fountain and take a sip. Like a bird's sailing, she moved to a chair, perched on the edge of it, bending toward him, clasping hands round a knee, a teasing twinkle in her eyes. It was so graceful that something oppressed his heart, and once more he said to himself in mournful protest, "Thunder! If she'd only be square!" That was the direction which his enforced admiration of her took—an evangelical direction. Secretly he was always hoping that the play would end with her reformation.

But she was giving no sign of that now, and in a smother of anger he thrust his hand into his trousers pocket, drawing forth a thick roll of bank notes inclosed with a rubber band which he silently extended to her.

With a swift change of pose she took the roll and spread it out on her knee, not counting the bills but fluttering them admiringly as a pretty woman handles a bit of lace or ribbon.

"Too bad they don't grow on bushes," she commented, and laughed. "Nice of you, Uncle Joe." And, as though it were a sufficient apology, she added: "We had to have it, you know. They're going to put us out of the hotel unless we pay the bill tonight." She rolled the bills again deftly, slipped the rubber band around the roll, and tossed it to her husband with, "Better see about it now, Nick."

The toss was a pretty thing, a free movement of the round, white arm, landing the roll neatly in her husband's hand. But Musham had a deep respect for money; her light fingering and tossing, as though the 500 were no more than a bit o ribbon, was secretly shocking to him, like whistling in church; so he declared, in helpless exasperation:

"I was a fool to bring it. I wont do it again." Red and angry, he flung at her uncompromisingly. "It's nothing but blackmail."

But at that insulting word she only laughed and twitted him, "Why, Uncle Joe, you know you don't want me to go ragged and hungry. You ought to blame the pigs that run the hotel. They won't let us stay here without money. And what's 500 to Benny, now that he's married a rich wife?"

That marital reference was offensive, and he blurted, "You're just blackmailing him. He's a fool to submit. Weak as a rag—that's the trouble with him. If his father and I hadn't been together thirty years—like brothers—if I didn't know the young blockhead was full of good intentions now—and scared out of his wits—" but he could hardly explain satisfactorily how he had got into this strange role of emissary in an affair of blackmail. [illegible] it had been the [illegible] young bridegroom's white, frightened face. [illegible] he declared hotly, "You've got to let him alone!"

She tipped her golden head a little and sweet laughter rippled. "Oh, probably I was careless," she mocked. "I ought to have got run over by a truck or struck by lightning instead of bobbing up here, awfully alive, after Benny's married his rich wife!"

Then, swift as thought, the laughter vanished; she stooped toward him again, grave and accusing. "You're awfully hard on me, Uncle Joe—not fair. It's just as I've told you before. Benny treated me like a dog. We were engaged. I gave up my career on the stage when I had good prospects. We would have been married, only he was afraid of his father—a man 23 years old! Then he got me to go to New York; he was to come on and we'd be married. He just strung me along. I suppose he'd already got his eye on the rich girl and wanted to get me out of the way. With his letters and the rest of the evidence I could sue him for breach of promise and get $100,000. A good lawyer told me so. But I didn't want to break him up; I forgave him. Gracious! He mustn't think he owns Chicago and that I can't ever come back here. The money he's been paying me, you see, is really only a little bit of what he really owes me. If he doesn't know that's so why does he keep on giving it? It's his guilty conscience. That's the truth, Uncle Joe."

She had said substantially that before, and now—as before—the old man sort of quailed and doubted, for she looked the lovely image of truth. But Benny, in spite of weakness, was the more truthful person of the two, and the circumstantial evidence was on his side. Besides, even when she looked so sweetly grave and accusing, he couldn't help an uneasy suspicion that the laughter was still bubbling inside her.

Capt. Helm, lounging against the back of a chair a dozen feet away, had been listening to this dialogue in calm detachment. He glanced again at the little gilt clock on the mantel which showed five minutes to 9, and stepped to the table to drop his half-smoked cigarette into the ash tray, saying to his wife, "I'll go pay the bill."

Musham's feeling about the woman may have been complex and not easily defined. But his feeling about the man was perfectly simple. Except to kick him he would no more have touched tall, immaculately dressed, distinguished looking Capt. Helm—into whose pocket the roll of bills had gone—than he would have touched a dirty rag. It occurred to him that the quick look which passed between husband and wife as the captain dropped his cigarette was a look of understanding. He rather suspected that he was going to be fooled again.

Under that suspicion he waited a moment after the captain's shapely, black clad back had disappeared through the door, then turned to the woman with a brusque demand: "Give me the letters." That referred to the stipulation he had made over the telephone—the stipulation which had induced him to come that evening, as she had insisted he must.

Was it fear in her pleading blue eyes? Every line of her lithe body seemed to plead as she said, "Honestly, Uncle Joe, I can't. He's got them." Then, lower and swiftly, "I'm sick of this. I want to get out of it. He's got me, too. What can I do?"

So he was fooled. Benny's letters were not to be surrendered to him as she had promised over the telephone. But the stooping woman's murderous, pleading voice was catching him in a new current as she hurried on, with veiled confessions, fear, unhappiness.

"Honestly, I'm sick of it. I'll do anything to get out if you'll only help me a little—some kind of a start. I haven't a cent, you know. He's suspicious now. He's hidden the letters somewhere. But I'll get them for you. Really I will. I promise you. There's a woman on Madison avenue in New York—she has an awfully cute little doll and toy shop. She told me she made a good living at it. I thought of something like that—here in Chicago, you know. I believe I could do it if I could get a start. Tell Benny to give me $1000 for the letters. You pay me the money after I've handed the letters over to you. I'll never bother him again. With $1000—if you'll help me get a lease on a little shop. I've been thinking it over all the while. I've got to get out of this."

Her low, rapid utterance ran on. It was the penitent Magdalene. The little gilt clock on the mantel clicked off the minutes. She stood up abruptly:

"Wait for me two or three minutes. Don't go. He may be coming back. He's suspicious now. I don't want him to think [illegible] She was moving toward the bedroom, her grave blue eyes upon him.

Musham, his aged heart expanded, gave an assenting nod. She fled into the bedroom, and at once he saw her headless image, as she sat at the dressing table, reflected in the pier mirror.

It was five minutes to 9 by the little gilt clock on the mantel, which was set to the second, when Helm stepped into the public hall, looking up and down. The hall was empty at that moment. He glided along it and swiftly let himself into a vacant bedroom. The Illini was a new hotel and there were half a dozen vacant bedrooms along that corridor. To get a duplicate of a chambermaid's pass key, so that he could enter any of those bedrooms at will, was an easy feat. He took up the telephone in the bedroom and called Altman's apartment.

In the parlor of that apartment Altman and his two friends were killing time agreeably with tall glasses, cigars, and conversation. In Mrs. Altman's bedroom the maid was doing up her mistress' hair—much of it hers by right of purchase. The door between that room and the small dining-room was open, but the door between dining-room and parlor was closed. The telephone was in the dining-room. It buzzed, and Mrs. Altman said to the maid, "See who it is." Nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of a thousand that is exactly what would have happened.

The maid went into the dining-room and returned a minute later looking excited. In the undertone that fellow conspirators use she said, "It's Mr. Arthur. He wants to see you—wants you to come downstairs. I tried to tell him, but they cut us off. I tried, but couldn't get him again. The lines are mixed up. He said he must see you."

Upon Mrs. Altman's fleshy maternal face a startled expression appeared. Arthur's sending the flowers, without any previous notice that he had left New York, was eccentric. This message was even more eccentric. As the confidential maid well knew, Arthur was given to eccentric behavior when under the influence of alcohol. If he was now downstairs in that state, like as not he would come blundering up here to the apartment—and touch off a grand family row. The sympathetic maid suggested, "I might go down and find him—see what he wants."

"Do!" her mistress replied eagerly. "Don't let him come up here." And she added, with a needless caution, "Don't go through the parlor."

The maid therefore went into the private hall, from which she could gain the public hall without disturbing Mr. Altman and his friends in the parlor. This also is exactly what would have happened, under the circumstances, nine hundred times out of a thousand—Mrs. Altman herself being in corset cover and underskirt, her hair half done up, and so unable to leave the apartment.

Stepping into the public hall, the maid at once saw the tall, distinguished figure of Capt. Helm walking toward her as though on his way to the elevators. She gave a little nod, which was unnecessary, and sped toward the stairway. Turning at right angles to gain the stairway, she threw a swift glance over her shoulder at the captain—also quite unnecessary. Capt. Helm indulgently reflected that the maid, being an amateur at grand larceny, was nervous. He strolled on.

It was now one minute to nine and the game was at its most critical stage, but there was a steely firmness in the captain's nerves as he stepped to the elevator landing, entered a cage, descended to the main floor, made his way to the cashier's office, called for his overdue weekly bill, and at once disputed an item so that the cashier was obliged to get out the signed checks from the restaurant and go over them with the guest. The object of this proceeding was to establish beyond question that from about 9 o'clock to about ten minutes after Capt. Helm was standing at the cashier's wicket arguing about his bill. No detective could dispute that alibi.

Earlier in the evening the maid had stepped into the bathroom between Mrs. Altman's bedroom and her husband's. Then she had run into the husband's bedroom and drawn the bolt on the door that gave to Helm's bedroom—which took her twenty seconds. When she returned from downstairs she was to go into the bathroom again, glide into Altman's bedroom, and rebolt the door to Helm's bedroom. The window in Altman's bedroom was up four or five inches. There was no fire escape, but an expert steeplejack or porchclimber might —possibly—scale the rear rough brick wall of the hotel and get through the open window [illegible] undiscovered.

But Helm presumed that police suspicion would fall upon himself and wife at [illegible] Their record was dubious. Their bedroom adjoined Altman's. On this night of the bi dance the hotel would be carefully watche Probably the police would be reluctant t believe that a porchclimber had scaled th rear wall unseen. So Capt. Helm had hi own alibi carefully arranged. And, as fo his wife, there would be the impeccable te timony of Josiah Musham that Mrs. Hel was under his eyes during every moment the time when the robbery must have bee committed. That was why Musham ha been summoned to the hotel that particula evening at a particular hour.

It was a beautifully symmetrical plan, Capt. Helm viewed it, and he took a pri of authorship in it, regarding it as anothe of those masterpieces which had enable him to reach the age of 36 without lab or visible income, and without any real serious collision with the police. Yet th plan might go wrong. The maid had le Altman's apartment at one minute to 9. S would return about ten minutes past 9. the interval some untoward circumstan might develop in the apartment. As that, they must take the chance. Just p sibly the maid might be prevented fr rebolting the door before the theft was d covered. They must take that chance. the jewelry was worth $100,000. A m who wouldn't take a chance for that wo better resign himself at once to working his living.

Something had gone wrong—a little— the apartment. Taking the jewel case fr her husband, Mrs. Altman had put it in second drawer of the dressing table, inste of putting it on the table as the maid h supposed she would do. That, howev seemed a trivial disarrangement of the pl for Mrs. Helm, not seeing the case on table, would naturally look for it in drawers. Left to herself after the m went downstairs to find Arthur, Mrs. man went on single-handed with the ela rate business of doing her hair. At n minutes past 9 the maid called the ap ment over a downstairs telephone. Altman heard the instrument buzzing in dining-room and naturally went in there answer.

It was the maid's voice saying someth or other about Arthur, but the teleph seemed to be working badly; Mrs. Alt couldn't make out the message. Then connection was broken, and she had to for it to be re-established. Altogether maid kept her at the phone nearly th minutes.

But Mrs. Altman had not been alone hearing the buzz. At eight minutes pa a corseted and kimonoed pillow stood the chair by Mrs. Helm's dressing table was duly reflected to Musham's eyes in pier mirror. Mrs. Helm herself, in w undress, lips apart, out of the caller's flected line of vision, was standing at slightly opened door to Altman's bedr listening breathlessly. The maid had the bathroom doors a little ajar. Mrs. H heard the telephone buzz and glided thro Altman's dark bedroom to the bathr An instant after Mrs. Altman disappe from her bedroom Mrs. Helm darted to dressing table.

This was the crucial moment for Mrs. Altman might step back and see Her nerves were not as hardy as the tain's, yet sufficient. The jewel case not on the dressing table. She atta the drawers, but the top one stuck, gi her trouble, for she must be careful no make a noise.

Nothing had happened to give Jo Musham any suspicion of the plot. All had occurred since he entered the seemed to be a natural flow and sequ of events. He had been alone in the p two or three minutes, undreaming of a ent plot; dreaming, indeed, something different.

The woman intrigued his heart—h ably, and piously, in his simple fas The picture she painted and the song murmured of the penitent Magdalene st his emotions, not only because she lovely and bubbling with life but bec down under many dusty layers of law daily habit, there was an evangel covenanter. Would she be square— into the fold? In a simple, undog piety he would have given much to b means to that end.

Absorbed in that, his brow wrinkle mechanically stood up, from a long ha thinking on his feet—tramping the over a knotty problem in law. Mecha the lips, save for the nicotine stain from his perpetual cigar—all these were as well known in London as in Africa, and could only be associated with the tremendous personality of Dr. Leon Sterndale, the great lion hunter and explorer.

THE ADVENTURES OF THE DEVIL'S FOOT

We had heard of his presence in the district, and had once or twice caught sight of his tall figure upon the moorland paths. Here, amid his books and his maps, he lived an absolutely lonely life, attending to his own simple wants, and paying little apparent heed to the affairs of his neighbors. It was a surprise to me, therefore, to hear him asking Holmes in an eager voice, whether he had made any advance in his reconstruction of this mysterious episode. "The county police are utterly at fault," said he; "but perhaps your wider experience has suggested some conceivable explanation. My only claim to being taken into your confidence is that during my many residences here I have come to know this family of Tregennis very well—indeed, upon my Cornish mother's side I could call them cousins—and their strange fate has naturally been a great shock to me. I may tell you that I had got as far as Plymouth upon my way to Africa, but the news reached me this morning, and I came straight back again to help in the inquiry."

"Did you lose your boat through it?"

"I will take the next."

"Was your baggage aboard the ship?"

"Some of it, but the main part at the hotel."

"I see. But surely this event could not have found its way into the Plymouth morning papers?"

"No, sir; I had a telegram."

"Might I ask from whom?"

"I have no objection to telling you," he said. "It was Mr. Roundhay, the vicar, who sent me the telegram which recalled me."

"Thank you," said Holmes. "I may say in answer to your original question that I have not cleared my mind entirely on the subject of the case, but that I have every hope of reaching some conclusion. It would be premature to say more."

"Then I have wasted my time, and need not prolong my visit." The famous doctor strode out of our cottage in considerable ill-humor, and within five minutes Holmes had followed him. I saw him no more until the evening, when he returned with a slow step and haggard face, which assured me that he had made no great progress with his investigation.

I was shaving at my window in the morning when I heard the rattle of hoofs, and, looking up, saw a dogcart coming at a gallop down the road. It pulled up at our door, and our friend the vicar sprang from it and rushed up our garden path. Holmes was already dressed, and we hastened down to meet him.

"We are evil-ridden, Mr. Holmes! My poor parish is devil-ridden!" he cried. "Satan himself is loose in it! We are given over into his hands!"

"Mr. Mortimer Tregennis died during the night, and with exactly the same symptoms as the rest of his family.

"Mr. Roundhay, we are entirely at your disposal. Hurry—hurry, before things get disarranged."

The atmosphere of the room was of a horrible and depressing stuffiness. The servant who had first entered had thrown up the window, or it would have been even more intolerable. This might partly be due to the fact that a lamp stood flaring and smoking on the center table. Beside it sat the dead man, leaning back in his chair, his thin beard projecting, his spectacles pushed up on to his forehead, and his lean, dark face turned toward the window and twisted into the same distortion of terror which had marked the features of his dead sister. He was fully clothed, though there were signs that his dressing had been done in a hurry. We had already learned that his bed had been slept in, and that the tragic end had come to him in the early morning.

One realized the red-hot energy which underlay Holmes's phlegmatic exterior when one saw the sudden change which came over him from the moment that he entered the fatal apartment. In an instant he was tense and alert, his eyes shining, his face set, his limbs quivering with eager activity. He was out on the lawn, in through the window, for all the world like a dashing foxhound drawing a cover. In the bedroom he made a rapid cast around, and ended by throwing open the window, which appeared to give him some fresh cause for excitement, for he leaned out of it with loud ejaculations of interest and delight. Then he rushed down the stair, out through the open window, threw himself upon his face on the lawn, sprang up and into the room once more, all with the energy of the hunter who is at the very heels of his quarry. The lamp, which was an ordinary standard, he examined with minute care, making certain measurements upon its bowl. He carefully scrutinized with his lens the talc shield which covered the top of the chimney, and scraped off some ashes which adhered to its upper surface, putting some of them into an envelope, which he placed in his pocketbook. Finally, just as the doctor and the official police put in an appearance, he beckoned to the vicar and we all three went out.

During the next two days Holmes spent some of his time smoking and dreaming in the cottage, but a greater portion in country walks which he undertook alone, returning after many hours without remark as to where he had been. One experiment served to show me the line of his investigation. He had bought a lamp which was the duplicate of the one which had burned in the room of Mortimer Tregennis on the morning of the tragedy. This he filled with the same oil as that used at the vicarage, and he carefully timed the period which it would take to be exhausted. Another experiment which he made was of a more unpleasant nature, and one which I am not likely ever to forget.

"You will remember, Watson," he remarked one afternoon, "that there is a single common point of resemblance in the varying reports which have reached us. This concerns the effect of the atmosphere of the room in each case upon those who had first entered it. You will recollect that Mortimer Tregennis, in describing the episode of his last visit to his brother's house, remarked that the doctor on entering the room fell into a chair? You had forgotten? Well I can answer for it that Mrs. Porter, the housekeeper, told us that she herself fainted upon entering the room and had afterward opened the window. In the second case—that of Mortimer Tregennis himself—you cannot have forgotten the horrible stuffiness of the room when we arrived, though the servant had thrown up the window. That servant, I found upon inquiry, was so ill that she had gone to her bed. You will admit, Watson, that these facts are very suggestive. In each case there is evidence of a poisonous atmosphere. In each case, also, there is combustion going on in the room—in the one case a fire, in the other a lamp. The fire was needed, but the lamp was lit—as a comparison of the oil consumed will show—long after it was broad daylight. Why? Surely because there is some connection between three things—the burning, the stuffy atmosphere, and, finally, the madness or death of those unfortunate people. That is clear, is it not?"

"It would appear so."

"At least we may accept it as a working hypothesis. We will suppose, then, that something was burned in each case which produced an atmosphere causing strange toxic effects. Very good. In the first instance—that of the Tregennis family—this substance was placed in the fire. Now, the window was shut, but the fire would naturally carry fumes to some extent up the chimney. Hence one would expect the effects of the poison to be less than in the second case, where there was less escape for the vapor. The result seems to indicate that it was so, since in the first case only the woman, who had presumably the more sensitive organism, was killed, the others exhibiting that temporary or permanent lunacy which is evidently the first effect of the drug. In the second case, the result was complete. The facts, therefore, seem to bear out the theory of a poison which worked by combustion.

"With the train of reasoning in my head I naturally looked about in Mortimer Tregennis's room to find some remains of this substance. The obvious place to look was the talc shield or smoke-guard of the lamp. There, sure enough, I perceived a number of flaky ashes, and round the edges a fringe of brownish powder, which had not yet been consumed. Half of this I took, as you saw, and I placed it in an envelope.

"Now, Watson, we will light our lamp; we will, however, take the precaution to open our window to avoid the premature decease of two deserving members of society, and you will seat yourself near that window in an armchair, unless, like a sensible man, you determine to have nothing to do with the affair. Oh, you will see it out, will you? I thought I knew my Watson. This chair I will place opposite yours, so that we may be the same distance from the poison, and face to face. The door we will leave ajar. Each is now in a position to watch the other and to bring the experiment to an end should the symptoms seem alarming. Is that all clear? Well, then, I take our powder—or what remains of it—from the envelope, and I lay it above the burning lamp. So! Now, Watson, let us sit down and await developments."

They were not long in coming. I had hardly settled in my chair before I was conscious of a thick, mucky odor, subtle and nauseous. At the very first whiff of it my brain and my imagination were beyond all control. A thick, black cloud swirled before my eyes, and my mind told me that in this cloud, unseen as yet, but about to spring out upon my appalled senses, lurked all that was vaguely horrible, all that was monstrous and inconceivably wicked in the universe. The turmoil within my brain was such that something must surely snap. I tried to scream, and was vaguely aware of some hoarse croak which was my own voice, but distant and detached from myself. At the same moment, in some effort of escape, I broke through that cloud of despair, and had a glimpse of Holmes's face, white, rigid and drawn with horror—the very look which I had seen upon the features of the dead. It was that vision which gave me an instant of sanity and of strength. I dashed from my chair, threw my arms round Holmes, and together we lurched through the door, and an instant afterward had thrown ourselves down upon the grass plot and were lying side by side, conscious only of the glorious sunshine which was burning its way through the hellish cloud of terror which had girt us in.

"Upon my word, Watson," said Holmes at last, with an unsteady voice, "I owe you both my thanks and an apology. It was an unjustifiable experiment even for oneself, and doubly so for a friend. I am really very sorry. I confess that I never imagined that the effect could be so sudden and so severe." He dashed to the cottage, and reappearing with the burning lamp held at full arm's length, threw it among a bank of brambles. "We must give the room a little time to clear. I take it, Watson, that you have no longer a shadow of doubt as to how these tragedies were produced?"

"None whatever."

"But the cause remains as obscure as before. Come into the arbor here and let us discuss it together, I think we must admit that all the evidence points to this man, Mortimer Tregennis, having been the criminal in the first tragedy, though he was the victim in the second one. We must remember, in the first place, that there is some story of a family quarrel, followed by a reconciliation. Well, in the next place, you will remember that this idea of someone moving in the garden, which took our attention for a moment from the real cause of the tragedy, emanated from him. He had a motive in misleading us. Finally, if he did not throw this substance into the fire at the moment of leaving the room, who did do so? The affair happened immediately after his departure. Had anyone else come in, the family would certainly have risen from the table. We may take it, then, that all the evidence points to Mortimer Tregennis as the culprit."

"Then his own death was suicide!"

"Well, Watson, it is on the face of it a not impossible supposition. There are, however, some cogent reasons against it. Fortunately, there is one in England who knows all about it, and I have made arrangements by which we shall hear the facts this afternoon from his own lips. Ah! he is a little before his time. Perhaps you would kindly step this way, Dr. Leon Sterndale."

"You sent for me, Mr. Holmes. I had your note about an hour ago, and I have come, though I am at a loss to know, sir, what you can have to speak about which affects me personally in a very intimate fashion."

"The killing of Mortimer Tregennis," said Holmes.

"What do you mean?" he asked at last.

"I will tell you," said Holmes, "and the reason why I tell you is that I hope frankness may beget frankness. What my next step may be will depend entirely upon the nature of your own defense."

Sterndale mopped his forehead with his handkerchief. "Upon my word, you are getting on," said he. "Do all your successes depend upon this prodigious power of bluff?"

"The bluff," said Holmes, sternly, "is upon your side, Dr. Léon Sterndale, and not upon mine. As a proof, I will tell you some of the facts upon which my conclusions are based. You came down here to [illegible] whom I suspected. I refused to [illegible] You then went to the vicarage, wai[illegible] side it for some time, and finally returned to your cottage."

"How do you know that?"

"I followed you. You spent a restless night at your cottage, and you formed certain plans, which in the early morning you proceeded to put into execution. Leaving your door just as day was breaking, you filled your pocket with some reddish gravel that was lying heaped beside your gate.

"You then walked swiftly for the mile which separated you from the vicarage. You were wearing, I may remark, the same pair of ribbed tennis shoes which are at the present moment upon your feet. At the vicarage you passed through the orchard and the side hedge, coming out under the window of the lodger Tregennis. You drew some of the gravel from your pocket, and you threw it up at the window above you."

"I believe that you are the devil himself!" he cried.

"It took two, possibly three, handfuls before the lodger came to the window. You beckoned him to come down. He dressed hurriedly and ascended to his sitting-room. You entered by the window. There was an interview—a short one—during which you walked up and down the room. Then you passed out and closed the window, standing on the lawn outside, smoking a cigar and watching what occurred. Finally, after the death of Tregennis, you withdrew as you had come. Now, Dr. Sterndale, how do you justify such conduct, and what were the motives for your actions? If you prevaricate or trifle with me, I give you my assurance that the matter will pass out of my hands forever."

Our visitor hesitated. Then he produced a photograph.

"That is why I have done it," said he.

It showed the bust and face of a very beautiful woman. Holmes stooped over it.

"Brenda Tregennis," said he.

"Yes, Brenda Tregennis," repeated our visitor. "For years I have loved her. For years she has loved me. There is the secret of that Cornish seclusion which people have marvelled at. It has brought me close to the one thing on earth that was dear to me. I could not marry her, for I have a wife who has left me for years and yet whom, by the deplorable laws of England, I could not divorce. For years Brenda waited. For years I waited. And this is what we have waited for." A terrible sob shook his great frame, and he clutched his throat under his brindled beard. Then with an effort he mastered himself and spoke on.

"The vicar knew. He was in our confidence. He would tell you that she was an angel upon earth. That was why he telegraphed to me and I returned. What was my baggage for Africa to me when I learned that such a fate had come upon my darling? There you have the missing clew to my action, Mr. Holmes."

"Proceed," said my friend.

Dr. Sterndale drew from his pocket a paper packet and laid it upon the table. On the outside was written, "Dadix pedis diaboli," with a red poison label beneath it. He pushed it towards me. "I understand that you are a doctor, sir. Have you ever heard of this preparation?"

"Devil's foot root! No, I have never heard of it."

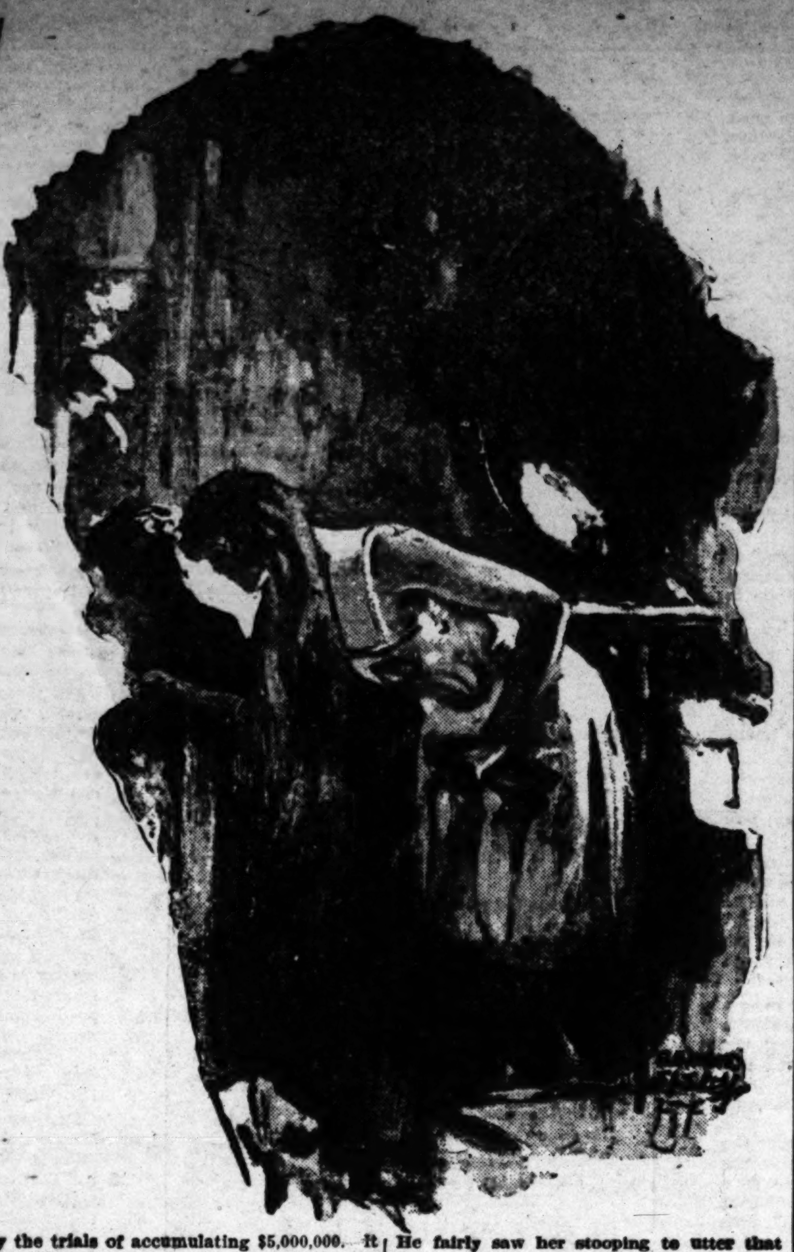
"It is no reflection upon your professional knowledge," said he, "for I believe that, save for one sample in a laboratory at Buda, there is no other specimen in Europe. The root is shaped like a foot, half human, half goatlike; hence the fanciful name given by a botanical missionary. It is used as an ordeal poison by the medicine-men in certain districts of West Africa, and is kept as a secret among them. This particular specimen I obtained under very extraordinary circumstances in the Ubanghi country." He opened the paper as he spoke and disclosed a heap of reddish-brown, snufflike powder.

"Well, sir?" asked Holmes sternly. "I have already explained the relationship in which I stood to the Tregennis family. For the sake of the sister I was friendly with the brothers. There was a family quarrel about money which estranged this man Mortimer, but it was supposed to be made up, and I afterwards met him as I did the others.

"One day, only a couple of weeks ago, he came down to my cottage and I showed him some of my African curiosities. Among other things I exhibited this powder, and I told him of its strange properties, how it stimulates those brain centers which control the emotion of fear, and how either madness or death is the fate of the unhappy native who is subjected to the ordeal by the priest of his tribe. I told him also how powerless [illegible] science would be to detect [illegible]

MUSHAM'S ESSAY

BY WILL PAYNE



He fairly saw her stooping to utter that desperate whisper.

JOSIAH MUSHAM of Musham & Maceldowney, patent lawyers, had let himself be persuaded to address the senior class of a Chicago law school—regretting his good nature as soon as he had yielded, for he detested making public addresses, or an appearance in public of any sort. The promise had been given, however, and he was now conscientiously composing the address.

His theme—not an original one—was loyalty to the law. There wasn't much of that in the United States, he wrote; for one thing, we were a hopelessly sentimental people; we insisted upon giving very criminal four chances of escape to one of conviction, and it was notorious that a pretty woman could murder any man she chose anywhere in the United States and go scot free.

As he wrote that, in his study at home of a Tuesday evening, he was thinking of one pretty woman in particular. Early Thursday evening before dinner he received a note from her asking him to call her up immediately at the Illini Hotel.

At the Illini Hotel, about that time, Capt. and Mrs. Helm—as they chose to call themselves for the time being—were carefully rehearsing a scene. They occupied a parlor and bedroom on the third floor. The dressing table, against the east wall of the bedroom, supported a broad, three-leaved mirror. A tall pier mirror stood near the south wall. When Mrs. Helm sat at the dressing table her image, reflected from the three-leaved mirror into the pier mirror, was clearly visible to Capt. Helm as he sat in an easy chair by the center table in the parlor.

They tried it many times, changing the ngle of the three-leaved mirror and the po-ition of the easy chair in the parlor; also, eadjusting the filmy scarf thrown over one eaf of the dressing table mirror so that this carf cut off the head and a slice of the houlders of the image reflected in the pier irror. Then Mrs. Helm put a corset on a illow, slipped her rose colored kimono over hat, and stood it in the chair by the dress-ng table. Capt. Helm, sitting in the parlor, ould not tell whether his wife or the pillow ccupied the chair by the dressing table. Irs. Helm would slide out of the chair, hip her kimono around the corseted pil-ow, and pop that into the chair. A witness itting in the parlor and looking into the ier mirror would think that the lady at the ressing table had taken a step to one side nd immediately resumed her seat at the ble. At length, after many rehearsals, apt. Helm expressed himself completely tisfied.

There was to be a ball at the Illini Hotel hat evening in honor of the Japanese rown Prince, and by half past 8 the vast stablishment was visibly tuning up for the reat event. All that afternoon its block-ong sober Georgian facade had been blos-oming in bright festoons of bunting, one atch after another, with wedded flags of he United States and Japan. The main bby was emblematically dressed in hrysanthemums and roses. By half past from the big gold braided doorman down the smallest page, every one was on edge r the coming zero hour; the last sack ats were vanishing from the lobby.

There were other portents; not so obvi-s to the casual observer—to-wit: Capt. acready from detective headquarters with ght subordinates, all duly white gloved d claw hammered, and Peter Backus him-lf with an even dozen of his operatives in e disguise of gentlemen attending a ball. was to be expected that Chicago would t on its shiniest ornaments for this occa-on; "everybody," excepting some two and half million plain citizens, would be there; e detectives were to keep every corner of big hotel and every dribble of the mob der watch.

At half past 8 Horace Altman left his artment on the third floor and went down the cashier's office. Afterwards Capt. acready remarked to him that he would turally be as careless of a hundred thou-nd dollars' worth of jewelry as of his life. at afternoon he had taken the jewels out the safe deposit vault downtown, brought em to the hotel, and seen them put into cashier's safe. He now got the jewel e from the cashier, opened it there to ke sure nothing was missing, locked it ain, and tucked it under his arm.

Altman, fat and bald, was already in full ning dress. His temper, none too good begin with, had been worn brittle as glass by the trials of accumulating $5,000,000. It sometimes seemed to his bewildered wife that it broke if she even looked at it. But he was genial among his men friends. Going from the cashier's office to the elevators he met two men friends, like himself already dressed and waiting for their wives. He invited them up to his apartment.

The apartment consisted of four rooms in a row, connected by a private hall which ran parallel to the public hall outside. There was the big corner room—parlor or living-room—then a smaller one that was sometimes used as a dining-room; then Mrs. Altman's bedroom; lastly Mr. Altman's bedroom. Leaving his friends in the parlor Altman carried the jewel case to his wife in her bedroom where a maid was preparing to do her hair. Then from the sideboard in the dining-room he took a brown bottle and three tall glasses—with which and a pitcher of cold water from the bathroom tap he and his friends settled themselves to spend the time pleasantly until the female toilets should be made and duty called them to a less congenial occupation.

Altman's bedroom, last in the row, adjoined the bedroom occupied by Capt. and Mrs. Helm. There was a door between, so that all the rooms along there could be thrown into one suite. The door was provided with a stout bolt on both sides so that an occupant on either side might be sure his neighbor did not trespass. Excepting this door between the bedrooms and the windows there was only one possible entrance to the Altman apartment—namely, by the door between the private hall and the parallel public hall.

About the time that Altman and his two friends were putting down half-drained glasses and lighting cigars in agreeable anticipation of a snug three-quarters of an hour chat, Josiah Musham arrived at the main entrance of the hotel in a taxi. Nervously consulting a gold watch whose large closed case had been worn smooth by a quarter century's use, he saw that it was fifteen minutes to 9; so he was just in time. He then noticed that a gaudy awning, in the form of a tent, stretched across the broad cement pavement from the curb to the hotel door. Beneath the awning a red carpet was spread for daintily shod feet. The gold-braided doorman stood at the curb, prepared to receive royalty and its friends. Already, at intervals, glistening machines were wheeling up there to discharge silk-hatted men and butterfly women.

Musham's vehicle was an unfavorable specimen of the genus taxi—decrepit and mud stained. Its frowsy driver looked as though he might be a blood relation of the vehicle. Musham himself was of the gangling and stringy build, unhandsome even in youth, and now with an overgrown, straggling mustache which age had not so much blanched as turned into a dirty sort of yellow. Although grown children bullied him into patronizing a respectable tailor, his clothes always had a baggy, hapbazard and heterogeneous look; at this moment his bow tie had come half undone and dangled bibulously.

A bricky redness was the common condition of his lean face. Noticing the festal signs at the Illini, he turned a bit redder, for he was one of those shy, absent men who try to carry it off with a grumpy air and secretly suffer a thousand mortifications. It was like him to be, perhaps, the only literate person in Chicago who did not know there was to be a ball for the Prince at the Illini that evening—balls and princes being as far out of his world as the Milky Way. The gold-braided doorman, turned up for royalty, sulkily opened the door of the disreputable taxi and regarded its scarcely more reputable passenger with candid resentment. Musham eyed him sternly, hastily handed him a half dollar, and stumped into the hotel, the pretty carpet like coals of fire under his rusty shoes that hadn't been shined in a week.

There was a saying among those who knew that you never could tell about a patent until Musham & Maceldowney had given an opinion on it. Gold-braided doormen might regard the senior member of that firm contemptuosly, but the Supreme Court of the United States did not, nor did a long list of clients—especially when they saw his bills. But he was incurably unfashionable and unsocial. Even an appearance in court he regarded as a bore. He lived in his law library and his family like a hermit crab in alternate shells. In the matter of clothes and all that clothes connoted he was now and then lumbering into embarrassing situations, feeling the embarrassment keenly, resolving to look out next time, and immediately forgetting to look out.

But clothes and momentary embarrassments were small matters tonight. Clutching his slouch hat in a bony hand, he strode across the bedecked lobby, where a few men and women in gala dress were beginning to gather, to the bank of elevators, and went up to the third floor. As on all the eight upper floors, there was a lounge in front of the elevator landing. Following the driections he had received over the telephone, he turned to the right, and to the left at the first angle, which brought him into the long hall upon which the Altman and Helm suites opened. Mr. Altman stood at the door of his apartment taking a box of flowers from a messenger boy. Passing, Musham nodded to him, and received a nod in reply. The box of flowers was addressed to Mrs. Altman. Her husband took it to the dining-room and dropped it on a chair there, calling into his wife's bedrooms, "Some flowers." He then returned to his friends in the parlor, shutting the door again after him.

Mrs. Altman's stout, dark maid, with a little mustache, stepped into the dining-room to get the flowers. The plain black fabric which covered her ample bosom fluttered from the rapid beating of her heart, and there was a nervous shimmer in her dark eyes. This was a momentous night for her.

The box contained a dozen roses and a calling card that read, "Mr. Arthur Spellman." At 45 Mrs. Altman had more flesh and less hair than she cared for; but there was a soft heart under the flesh and a great wish for domestic peace beneath the hair. At sight of the calling card her lips parted in a sudden alarm too acute for words, and a hunted look in her eyes appealed to the maid. Mr. Arthur Spellman was her nephew, and one of her chief afflictions—with a good heart, as she always forlornly maintained, but a weakness for stimulants and an inveterate carelessness in money matters. This last failing had caused a violent breach between her husband and her nephew, and she was under a strict prohibition not to have any intercourse or communication with the culprit. Yet he was her own sister's flesh and blood, and her heart was soft. Like many another woman under the iron hand of domestic tyranny, she had a confederate in her maid.

For some three months Arthur had been conducting himself respectably in New York, to his aunt's immense relief. These flowers, however, came from a Chicago florist, so unfortunately Arthur must be near at hand. The dismayed mistress asked her maid's opinion as to what it might portend—with a keen foreboding that it portended more trouble for her. There was no further clew in the box. Tearing up the card, so she could tell her husband, in case he happened to ask, that she didn't know who sent the flowers, Mrs. Altman unhappily resumed her toilet.

Musham, meanwhile, consulting the numbers on the doors, had gone on to the one that gave to Helm's parlor, at which he knocked. Capt. Helm threw open the door, smiling cordially—a tall man of 35 or so, with a neatly pointed red beard and light blue eyes, dressed for the ball.

Musham acknowledged the smile with a grumpy nod, and strode in. The door to the adjoining bedroom was ajar. Thence a gay voice lilted at him, "Hello, Uncle Joe! Be out there in a minute." Nobody else had ever called him "Joe," let alone "Uncle Joe." He said he didn't care to be called that. Capt. Helm was courteously steering

PALM CANYON

IN THE past few years since Palm Springs has grown self-conscious about that "Oriental feel," there has been a marked change in the atmosphere of the village. Once it was enough for those who wished a winter home amid desert glamor to build a little gray wooden house and sit in the sun. Then one or two newcomers with a flair for oriental color schemes built gay bungalows. The old timers took notice and forthwith there was a grand sloshing about of pink and blue paints, the crisis of the disease being reached in a long low house generally known as "The Tomato in Convulsions."

More recently several villas have been built that indeed suggest North Africa or Biskra. Villas with shaded courts and gracious palms, with rugs like banners hanging on the walls and gay awnings.

It is night at such a villa. What are those white figures silhouetted on the roof? Is it the muezzin, the call to prayer? "Allah is Allah!" No, it is a phonograph jazzing. "Oh honey child you've got to love me for you drive me wild."

The young people are dancing on the housetop, under the big round desert stars.

Thus far I have written only of winter days in the Valley of the Sun and the new national monument.

"How about the summers?" someone may ask.

"Keep off the desert!" is the proper sign post for summers.

Nearly all our national parks, the Rocky Mountain Park, for example, and the Yellowstone, are summer parks; the Monument of Palms is quite as distinctively, a resort for winter and the early spring.

To see it and Our Araby in their hightide of beauty choose some days from mid-March to mid-April for the great adventure. For then your motor trip, from whatever direction you travel, will show you "thousands on thousands of prayer-rugs from the Shah's palaces spread beside your way."

But, No! That borrowed description of the desert in full blossom falls before those living waves of color, breaking mile after mile on the wrinkled gray sands of the Colorado Desert. Each wave with its distinctive color. For though there is a certain mingling of flowers and hues, always one flower, one color, predominates for a wave length. A wave, a mile long wave of the rose-violet sand verbena, most common and best loved of all desert flowers. Next a high yellow wave of "desert gold." A long blue wave of lupins. Then a wave of white primroses, larger and more snowy here than anywhere else, a vast wave of primroses breaking in white foam on the sands.

And these colors spread into the national monument. They mount its canyon walls. Golden incense bush clinging to the rocks, the rose of the coral bush, the wonder of the wild lilac—blues and lavenders and white and pomgranate colors.

I have walked among the purples of the heather clad hills of Scotland. I have seen the gorgeous gardens of the Riviera at their most magnificent moment. But nowhere have I known such unimagined flowery splendor as last April when I traveled over the Colorado Desert to what is now the National Monument of Palms.

"Kindness"

Of all the gifts bestowed on man,
Of all the many close at hand,
This one I say I would demand,
Kindness.

Of all the traits we see among
The millions who can claim a tongue,
Each one should recognize, if done,
Kindness.

Of all the marvels on this earth,
I wonder if there's greater birth
Within one's soul to welcome worth.
Kindness.

Of all the acts below, above,
Before and after Noah's dove,
The noblest is, except true love, them the elevation is 2866 feet, or around that. When they set the instrument on the place it reads 2871. Six feet off. Well, Coffey explains, he was figuring from his head. Pretty good, eh (Punch!) Then there are always slews of automobile parties out for a good time. They ask him where to go, and whether they can get through with the automobiles. He looks the latter over, tells them which ones to leave behind and sends them happily on their way.
Kindness.

But last winter Coffey stumbled, so to speak. It just goes to show how the cocksureness of book knowledge can sometimes take the wind out of the sails of first-hand knowing. A lady botanist from the East was collecting specimens at Dos Palms. Frank gave her a lot of useful information. told her the only place the crucifixion bush grows, and so on. The Yucca Mohavensis came up for discussion. The lady said the name was Latin. Frank was almost sure it was Indian; he had always knwn Mohave Indians. No, the lady assured him the word was Latin, and Frank capitulated. He was asking me not long ago if I had ever heard of Latin Indians!

Frank treats everybody with consideration and politeness. Notwithstanding the fact that people are usually after information and primed with questions, Frank refrains from inquiring into their intentions and business. He reasons that if they wanted him to know they would tell him. Moreover, he appreciates the fact that a certain secrecy generally envelops the first stages of big projects; and the big ones are the sort that Frank, with his agglomeration of claims, has the most respect for. If they find that they want iron, he can show them where to get it; if they want fertilizer, he can lead them to fields of gypsum and caves of guano; if they would like to manufacture talcum powder, he can show them deposits so thick and slick that a mountain sheep couldn't stand up on them. Or, if they want gold—well, it takes gold to extract gold, and Frank would rather not go into that subject until some gentleman is ready to talk business.

Made Matters Worse

Dr. Adolf Lorenz, the Viennese surgeon, said at a dinner in New York:

"Worse than surgical cases are neurotic ones—people with disordered nerves whose ailments are imaginary—people with neurasthenia, melancholia and so on.

"A man with a neurotic wife said to me one day:

"'Recently my wife took to imagining that every noise meant a burglar. She kept me awake half the night.'

"'You should have told her,' said I, "that burglars work in silence.'

"'I did,' said the man, 'with the result that silence frightens her now worse than noises did. She's kept me awake all night ever since.'"—[Detroit Free Press.

Cat Lost

A woman had left on a table three pounds of butter. Coming back home the butter was gone. Seeing a cat nearby, she at nce suspected the animal, but to be sure, she took the cat to the scales to weigh it. She found it weighed just three pounds. "There's my butter," she exclaimed, "but where is the cat?"—[Judge.

"Rocks"

They stand forever and a day
In grimness firm, nor lend nor bend;
They show the marks of joy and play
And their deep lines the tragic trend.

Upon their backs, nearer the sky,
The traveler has sought the w..y
To find the knowledge that would nigh
Make him the foremost of his day.

They've blocked the trail; they've hindered some
And others lost, in ages past,
They served as pillows, where the dumb
Often did rest, and dying, gasp.

They are the foundation of earth
We build our mighty structures on,
And ever since this old world's birth,
They've been the core of divine song.

She Was Russia's "Empress of Beauty"

—and her wonder-working beauty secret now is YOURS!

BY GEORGES A. BREON.

IN PARIS they called her "Russia's Empress of Beauty," and well she deserved the title. I cannot say her figure was superb. And in form and regularity of features, she was not superior to millions of other women—particularly American women. Surprising, too, she was no longer young, as years are counted. Yet, when she passed, men forgot not to stare and women admittedly beautiful failed to conceal their envy.

Such is the irresistible power of a beautiful complexion—and that was her charm. Her complexion was perfect! Neither the horrors of war nor the severities of varying climates had put upon it the slightest flaw. As a pale orchid her skin was tinted. As the rarest silk it was soft and smooth. Withal it had the glow of health and firmness—unmarred by line or flabbiness. And the secret of that wonderful complexion—which, I assure you, any woman can possess—was nothing mysterious, although for years it had been guarded carefully by "the Empress." It was vacuum skin cleansing! No, not with any mechanical device, but by a simple method which you, Madame or Mademoiselle, can easily use in the privacy of your own room and with immediate success—a success so amazing you will say: "It is a miracle!"

I was introduced to this beautiful refugee by a friend who, like me, is a chemist. Not ordinarily would this meeting have come about, for she was of the Russian nobility. But, in the Great War and the revolution she had lost family and fortune. So, fleeing to Paris, she found herself, like many others of Russia's aristocracy, without means. Thus finally she was obliged to reveal for money the wonder-working secret to which her beauty was due. It was while she was so negotiating with my friend that I met her.

"How old is she?" he asked as we returned to his laboratories. When I guessed 24 years he laughed; and, since her identity is to remain always a secret, I may tell you with propriety his reply.

"By chance, I know," he said, "that she is thirty-nine. It was because I knew her age that I was willing to pay the large sum she demanded for her beauty method. It seems to be a veritable renewer of youth."

Such indeed, we found it to be. In hundreds of cases I have seen a single treatment by this method virtually remake a complexion—lifting out blackheads, removing eruptive waste, diminishing wrinkles and enlarged pores, restoring to flabby tissues the delicate graces of youth and leaving the skin like beautifully tinted velvet. So impressed was I by the results of this quick vacuum cleansing treatment that I obtained from my friend the right to prepare for American women the wonderful plastique—for such it is and in this country is known as Breon's Vacuum Plastique.

But I beg you not to confuse this Vacuum Plastique with any cold cream or the so-called "beauty muds" or "clays." It is in every detail a high-grade refined laboratory product composed of most expensive ingredients, and contains nothing which can stain, scratch, roughen or otherwise injure the most delicate skin. On the contrary, it is, without exception, the most remarkably soothing of skin treatments—a healer and a cleanser combined. In texture, my Vacuum Plastique is as smooth as cream; in odor, like the flowers; in effect, delightful as well as beneficial, causing a pleasant, pulling sensation—a little tingle so that you actually feel the impurities being drawn from your skin and the fallen or saggy parts lifted back to their proper contour, for the Plastique has a true vacuum action, the greatest of all tissue builders. Apply it just as you would a cold cream, let the vacuum process go on for 20 minutes, or longer if you wish, then remove the Plastique with damp cloths and—behold! you will find the skin as soft, lively and rosy as a child's!

Regardless of the condition of your skin, a single treatment with my Vacuum Plastique will produce results at which you will marvel most happily—a single treatment, which you can complete in 20 to 30 minutes. I am so sure of this that I will bargain with you to send you a large $2 tube of the Plastique on condition that, if satisfactory, it costs you only $1 and that if it fails or disappoints you, it costs you nothing.

Send me no money—merely your name and address on the coupon below, putting a little cross before the name of any conditions you find most troublesome. (This will enable me to fit a treatment to your exact needs.) Your supply of the Plastique—the regular $2 size, enough for several months—will come to you fresh and potent, as I make the Plastique up as needed—fresh every day. When the Vacuum Plastique is delivered, please pay the postman only $1 and postage. Then give this delightful vacuum cleansing method a trial. If the first treatment—the very first treatment—fails to do all I say and to more than delight you—if it is not equal or superior to beauty shop treatments costing $5 to $10 each—simply write me and I will refund your dollar by the first mail.

This special guaranteed, half-price offer is in effect solely to hasten the introduction of the Vacuum Plastique to American women. It may be withdrawn at any time. Therefore I urge you to send the coupon today—not only because you will get a bargain by so doing, but because, if you act now, you can have virtually a new complexion one week from today! Is that not sufficient reason why you should put the coupon into the very next mail? Please address me at my nearest laboratory.

M. Georges Breon, Pres.,
Georges Breon Laboratories.

I accept your offer of a guaranteed trial of Breon's Vacuum Plastique. You may send me a regular $2 tube, for which I will pay the postman $1 and postage on delivery, with the understanding that you will refund my money if I find the Vacuum Plastique not as represented. (Put an "x" before each of the following words describing your case.) ....Dry Skin. ....Oily Skin. ....Pimples. ....Blackheads. ....Enlarged Pores. ....Flabbiness. ....Wrinkles. ....Sallowness. ....Tetter. ....Eruptions.

Kitty Kiernan

YOU wouldn't think there is much sentiment, or much of the soul of poetry in the man who used to be a statistician—our neighbor in the green Verdugo Hills who has spent most of his life dealing with cold-blooded figures.

But there are lots of surprises in life. We know a man who has a red nose and every appearance of a booze fighter, and yet he has never touched a drop of any kind of intoxicating liquor since the day he was born. And we once knew another man who had the name of being a close-fisted miser, and yet, when he died, the people found out that he had practiced a secret charity that was unbelievable. He had clothed the naked and fed the hungry, though his fellow-men did not know he was doing it. He did it all in the dark, as you might say. He did not even let his left hand know what his right hand was doing.

So, we can't always judge a man from what our eyes see of him, or what our ears hear of him. And it were well for us to be careful, always, in forming opinions of our neighbors.

And just to prove it, we cite the case of the man who used to be a statistician.

It was on the stone fence where the neighbors had gathered for the evening talk, and to watch the sunset on the Ventura Mountains, and to wait for the stars to light their lamps, and to hear the first chorus of the crickets in the chaparral.

And the talk was about Kitty Kiernan. And it was started, of course, by the man who reads the papers.

This is a heart-breaking thing about poor Kitty Kiernan over there in the little green land of Ireland, said the man who reads the papers. It makes a fellow cry to read about her, he said.

A tender heart has our beloved old neighbor who reads the papers. It is the easiest thing in the world to set a mist of tears brimming in his eyes. He was born with a poet's heart and has never lost it.

But, we are wandering from the story, as the saying is. And that's a bad habit we have. Many of the members of the Congregation of the Faithful have told us as much, right in the synagogue, before all the people.

Well, as we have said, the talk that evening on the stone fence was about Kitty Kiernan weeping through the little green land of Ireland for her dead lover.

It is too bad, of course, said the man who used to be a statistician. And still, she is to be envied above all the women of the world living today. Rust will eat her lover's sword; the lily she placed on his coffin will fade and wither. But, the women of the world have taken her forever to their hearts; and they will wash her raven tresses with their tears.

And think of what she will be to the people of the little green land of Ireland now and to the day she dies, and after that, said the man who used to be a statistician. She will be the object of their tenderest love and care. She will be guarded as though with ranks of steel. The bards of Erin—and Erin will never be without bards—will weave their silver songs about her. Old women will croon above her, and stroke her hair, and call her by tender Gaelic names. In the wild mountains of Galway, in the Glen of Glenties, from the Causeway of the Giants to Cape Clear, she shall never walk alone again. Always there will be some faithful, loving footstep to follow her.

Well, sir, as the man who used to be a statistician talked, we could see, as in a vision, Kitty Kiernan walking like that through the little green land of Ireland, the winds caressing her hair, and the voices of the sea whispering in her ears.

But, said the man who reads the papers, even all this will never be able to heal the scar in poor Kitty Kiernan's heart.

And that's true, too. Only God can do that.

Female of the Species

YOU all may remember that, there awhile back, we printed a piece on this poor, blundering page, about a mosquito that came up from a swamp near the ocean and raised the dickens with a big financier from Wall Street who had come to Los Angeles.

Well, if you remember, we referred to the mosquito as a gentleman mosquito—that is to say, a mosquito of the masculine gender. It would be, of course, a stretch of the imagination to speak of any mosquito as a gentleman.

Comes now a member of the Congregation of the Faithful whose habitat is Anaheim—Anaheim, bright and beautiful and that once had a brewery which is now turned into a pickle factory or something like that. And the member rises in the synagogue and says that we made a mistake; that no male mosquito bites; that all the biting is done by the female of the species.

By gollies, it was a revelation to us. It is a thing that we never knew about before. And we could hardly believe it to be true. But, we looked it up, and it is true—as true as preaching. There isn't a shadow of a doubt about it. It is the female of the species that raises the dickens, and no one else. A male mosquito is as harmless as an old dog without teeth.

In the book where we went for information on the subject we found that a Scotchman named MacLachlan spent years and years of his life studying mosquitos. He got so he knew them by clans and families and tribes. And he could tell a lady mosquito from a gentleman mosquito with one eye closed.

And MacLachlan, canny Scot that he was, even went so far as to defend the mosquito from the slanders that have been heaped upon it. He says they are not naturally blood-suckers. And that they are a universal institution.

You will find mosquitos everywhere you have a mind to go—in the Klondyke, at the Equator, in Wall Street and out on the Desert of Sahara, among the palaces of kings and in the humble cottages of peasants. They are no respecters of persons, either. They thought no more of taking a bite out of the nose of Alexander the Great than they did of boring into the proboscis of a wandering beggar.

Heaven Enough for Me

The night-blooming jasmine
Shall hang along my starlit way
Her scented tiny bells,
And the moon-loving mocking-bird
Shall sing his silver song for me
In fragrant piny dells.

I shall see the morning sun
Shine warm upon the dewy grass
And kiss the apple flowers
And I shall wander wooded paths,
Where winds and birds sweet music blend
Thru all the happy hours.

They speak to me of golden streets,
Of harps and crowns and jeweled halls
And gleaming, glassy sea;
They say the snow-capped hills I love
Shall be forever leveled down!—
'Twould not be Heaven to me.

Oh, sadly I should watch in vain
To see the white sails gliding in,
And sunset o'er the deep;
And I should pine for mountain ways—
Fern-bordered trails, and rocky heights
Where snow streams laugh and leap.

God made for us the pleasant land,
The birds and the flowers, the friends we love,
The curbless, murmuring sea.
I'll seek no gold-decked world above;
I ask but Nature, Life and Love—
These Heaven enough shall be.

—JUNE MELODY.

MacLachlin those disposes of many fallacies and erroneous ideas concerning mosquitos, and especially that they are natives and persistent inhabitants of New Jersey. And their right name is "Culicidae." And they are dipterous.

The only thing that we can see that MacLachlan left undone is that he does not appear to have reduced to writing the folk songs of the Culicidae. And, by gollies, he overlooked a big bet, as the saying is, when he failed to do that.

So, here is another important matter straightened out. And we are thankful for it, if only for the reason that it has given us an opportunity to apologize to all male members of the mosquito nation. And there are countless millions of them, too.

It Is To Laugh

WE ARE in receipt of a sour letter from a man who somewhat regularly reads this poor blundering page in the best magazine in the world. The man lambastes us good in the letter he wrote. And no doubt we deserve it. But, as far as he is concerned, he should not have written the letter.

Because he merely added to the apparently already deplorable state of his liver by so doing. It dries up the digestive fluid in a man's stomach to be fault-finding. And who are we that we should be considered worth it that a man should upset himself just for something we said that did not please him.

We do not think that this man is a member of the Congregation of the Faithful, really and truly, although he does read this page. We fear that he does not say his prayers mornings and evenings. And he must at least do that to be a member of the Congregation. It is the only condition of membership, and it is an easy condition. He would not give vent to bad humor if he would say his prayers. There is nothing that so sweetens life as a little prayer now and then.

Well, what he found fault with was that we had told a joke in a piece that we wrote. And the man says it is an old joke. And that he has heard it before lots of times. And that it makes him as sore as a boil to be asked to laugh at a joke that he got tired of laughing at long ago.

Dang it, how can he blame us and fly into a temper for a thing like that?

In the first place, we didn't know it was an old joke. It was certainly new to us, anyway. No matter if it be a joke that was told around the streets of Babylon, it was new to us. Anything is new to anyone who has never seen it or heard it before.

We know a man who eats fried potatoes for breakfast every morning. And every morning fried potatoes are new to him. Each morning he lights into that mess of spuds the same as though he had never tasted a fried potato before in his life. And that's the way we all should regard jokes.

For the fact is that there are really no such things as new jokes. They are all merely modifications, adaptations and readjustments of one or the other of the thirteen original jokes. It has been proved that there are only thirteen jokes in existence and that all others are merely offshoots of them. In other words, there hasn't been one single new joke invented during the last twenty thousand years, or since that fellow wrote on the rocks in Sumaria the story of the locusts and the grasshoppers.

So, this being the case, the thing for every man to do is to always laugh at a joke no matter how many times he has heard it before.

The thing to do when you hear one of these old jokes coming is to say to yourself, ah! here comes my old friend that has tickled my sides so many times in the past. I am glad that I shall have the chance to laugh again. I don't laugh half enough. No wonder I don't get fat, and that my liver is balky. I must laugh more. And I will laugh twice as much at these old jokes as I ever laughed at them before.

In these and in divers and sundry other ways, we shall get the best out of life. We shall say our prayers with buoyant hearts, we shall love our neighbors, we shall visit the sick and comfort those who mourn. We shall go to the circus when it comes to town and always follow a brass band.

Then, the devil, who goes about the world seeking the destruction of souls, will be batted out of the game and never get even as far as first base.

Sunday

ONE Sunday, not long ago, we took a long journey. We went through a big city and through a number of little towns. And out across wide stretches of the pastoral country.

And had we not known, beforehand, that the day was Sunday, everything we saw would have informed us of the fact. A hush was upon the world that had been so noisy the day before. Quiet brooded over towns and fields. The marts were closed. No, smoke issued from the stacks and chimneys of mills and factories, and in the fields and wooded places the very cattle and even the trees seemed to keep holy the Lord's Day.

Now, we know very well that when we say this—that the day called Sunday is "the Lord's Day," we shall receive many letters—as often in the past—calling us to task. We shall be told that it is Saturday and not Sunday that is the Lord's Day.

But what matter about that? The important thing is that a Christian world has set aside one day of the week for the Lord. One day for rest, one day which, more than the other days of the week, gives opportunity for us to think, less distressed by the world and its ways, upon the mercy and the goodness of God.

It is not a thing to quibble about, or to quarrel over, it seems to us—which day a man shall take to make his Sunday. Perhaps this is not a good orthodox view, and, also, it is to be at outs with one's neighbors to select a day other than the one the vast majority has decided upon. Although, at the same time, it must be admitted that there are many who love God, and who have for the Sabbath not the same day that the majority has.

We do not think that God will question any of us much on that score, anyhow. If we can say that we loved Him, and that we gave always one grateful day out of seven to Him, it will pass us through the Jasper Gates, provided we did the best we could every other way, too.

THE DEVIL'S FOOT

for I never left the room, but there is no doubt that it was then, while I was opening cabinets and stooping to boxes, that he managed to abstract some of the devil's foot root. I well remembered how he plied me with questions as to the amount and the time that was needed for its effect, but I little dreamed that he could have a personal reason for asking.

"I thought no more of the matter until the vicar's telegram reached me at Plymouth. This villain had thought that I would be at sea before the news could reach me, and that I should be lost for years in Africa. But I returned at once. Of course, I could not listen to the details without feeling assured that my poison had been used. I came round to see you on the chance that some other explanation had suggested itself to you. But there could be none. I was convinced that Mortimer Tregennis was the murderer; that for the sake of money, and with the idea, perhaps, that if the other members of the family were all insane he would be the sole guardian of their joint property, he had used the devil's foot powder upon them. There was his crime; what was to be his punishment?

"Should I appeal to the law? Where were my proofs? I knew that the facts were true, but could I help to make a jury of countrymen believe so fantastic a story? I might or I might not. But I could not afford to fail. I determined that the fate which he had given to others should be shared by himself.

"Now I have told you all. You have yourself supplied the rest. I did, as you say, after a restless night, set off early from my cottage. I foresaw the difficulty of arousing him, so I gathered some gravel from the pile which you have mentioned, and I used it to throw up to his window. He came down and admitted me through the window of the sitting-room. I laid his offense before him. I told him that I had come both as judge and executioner. The wretch sank into a chair paralyzed at the sight of my revolver. I lit the lamp, put the powder above it, and stood outside the window ready to carry out my threat to shoot him should he try to leave the room. In five minutes he died. There is my story, Mr. Holmes. Perhaps, if you loved a woman, you would have done as much yourself. At any rate, I am in your hands. You can take what steps you like."

Holmes sat for some little time in silence.

"What were your plans?" he asked at last.

"I had intended to bury myself in Central Africa. My work there is but half finished."

"Go and do the other half," said Holmes. "I, at least, am not prepared to prevent you."

Dr. Sterndale raised his giant figure, bowed gravely, and walked from the arbor. Holmes lit his pipe and handed me his pouch.

"Some fumes which are not poisonous would be a welcome change," said he. "I think you must agree, Watson, that it is not a case in which we are called upon to interfere. Well, Watson, I will not offend your intelligence by explaining what is obvious. The gravel upon the window sill was of course the starting point of my research. It was unlike anything in the vicarage garden. Only when my attention had been drawn to Dr. Sterndale and his cottage did I find its counterpart. The lamp shining in broad daylight and the remains of powder upon the shield were successive links in a fairly obvious chain. And now, my dear Watson, I think we may dismiss the matter from our mind, and go back with a conscience to the study of those Chaldean roots which are surely to be traced to the Cornish branch of the great Celtic speech."

SISTER ANNE

"So, of course," Charlotte continued, tranquilly, after a little pause to give this a chance to sink in, "I told him it was all right. I said I'd just got a check from father for $360; $60 of it was for you, but the rest of it would keep us going all right until the partnership could begin. So Wilfred said that was fine, and began studying for the exam the next morning."

"And you mean to sit there," Anne demanded, "and calmly tell me you've stolen all of my $300?"

"Yes," said Charlotte. "I'd hoped you'd understand that. I mean that it was your money, and that I'd stolen it from you, not from father. I'll pay it back to you, of course, when I can, but I don't know how soon that will be."

Amazingly, Anne found herself fighting back tears. "But I need it now!" she cried. "This is my last chance. I'm getting old I tell you. Oh, don't grin at me in that beastly way! It's true. Most people who're real dancers start when they're about 6."

"Wilfred's 28," said Charlotte. "It's sort of a turning point with him. The war took two years away from him, of course, and if he had to go back now to drawing nasty little details like newel posts and window moldings in some big machine of an office, it might make a slave of him, and I'd be the person who did it.

"I suppose I'd have taken the money any way, though I'd have felt awfully about it, even if I hadn't had that talk with you. But after you'd taught me to anaylze myself and see what a mean guy I really was it was as easy as—sleeping. Why, I even took thirty of it for myself, for my own piano. I took that first of all.

"Of course there's this," she concluded, rising and moving a little way in Anne's direction, "if you'd really let father see that you needed the money seriously instead of letting him see that you were trying to vamp it out of him, he'd probably have sent it to you direct, and then I'd never have got a chance at it. Luckily for me, you didn't."

By now the taxi was ticking away in front of the door. But Anne continued to sit where she was, among her ruins, the tears spilling forlornly down her face.

"Cheer up!" Charlotte commanded. "If you really do mean business about being a dancer, you'll manage it somehow. Borrow the money from somebody. Or make Baum give you lessons free for having got up the class—after all that's only 10 per cent commission."

Anne dried her eyes and steadied herself with a long breath. "Oh, I suppose I can wangle it out of Miss Hood. She'll usually do anything I tell her to, if I frame it right." Then she got to her feet and stood for the better part of a long minute, gazing at her big sister. Suddenly she flung her arms around Charlotte, tight, and gave her a long, hard kiss. Then, without a word, she took up her bag and started for the door.

"You're a good little sport," said Charlotte, as she stood at the curb beside the taxi, "taking your own medicine like that."

"Oh, I'm all right, of course," said Anne. "See you in June. Give Wilfred my love and wish him luck for me."

"I'll do that," Charlotte answered soberly.

Then she went back to the baby, whom she heard waking up.

STORY OF CALIFORNIA

approach to North America from Europe was on the Atlantic side. There are numerous harbors and navigable streams along the Atlantic seaboard; while on the Pacific harbors and rivers are few and far between. But, what proved to be a far more serious obstacle to exploration on the Pacific, the great continent itself, about whose real dimensions so little was known for generations, lay directly across the highway to the Pacific.

However, the wonderful search for the Northwest Passage, the persistent endeavor to find the mysterious water-way called the Straits of Anian—long believed to connect the Atlantic and the Pacific—was a powerful incentive to European princes and navigators to push on despite every difficulty in the work of discovery and exploration.

Spain the Pioneer Nation—It was the Spaniards—or navigators under Spanish colors—who first explored the Gulf of Mexico, who discovered the Mississippi, who first saw the mighty Pacific from Darien, who explored Western Mexico, and who made California known to the civilized world. Where can we find a more intrepid captain than Cortes, the conqueror of Mexico, or a bolder navigator than Magellan, who first pointed his prows into the Pacific and whose men first circled the globe?

Discovery of California. Cortes.—The vain hope of discovering a new route to India and of finding unlimited quantities of gold made Cortes the master of Mexico and caused him to send out expedition after expedition to the "upper coasts of the South Sea." Ships that he had built at Zacatula first sailed the North Pacific; the commander of one of them, Fortuno Ximenez, discovered Lower California, in 1533, and the captain of another, Francisco de Ulloa, doubled Cape San Lucas and proceeded north on the outside, thus proving Lower California to be a peninsula.

Cabrillo—The real discoverer of Alta California—our own California—was Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo. He headed northward from Navidad on a June day in 1542, and by early autumn he had entered waters never before navigated by ships belonging to Europeans. In late September the Coronado Islands were passed, and Cabrillo entered the beautiful port of San Diego.

He proceeded up the coast, and in November rounded the Point of Pines into Monterey Harbor. Still onward he pressed, coming almost to the Golden Gate. But being compelled to turn back on account of wintry weather and cheerless prospects, his important discoveries were cut short by death.

Being now compelled to turn back on account of wintry weather and a heavy sea, he remained on the islands of the Santa Barbara Channel for many weeks. On January 3, 1543, as the result of a broken arm and long exposure, this great navigator, earliest among the heroes of Alta California, died on the island of San Miguel.

Ferrelo—Before death overtook him, however, Cabrillo gave an order to his chief pilot, Bartolome Ferrelo, to proceed still further north. This order was faithfully carried out. Ferrelo passed Cape Mendocino in February, 1545, and probably reached latitude 42 deg., which became the northern boundary of California.

Thus, before the middle of the sixteenth century, the entire coast line of California had been explored, though quite imperfectly, by navigators sailing under the Spanish flag.

shrubs planted for ornamental purposes in our region, but has also been taken to many other parts of the world where the climate is mild enough for it to thrive. There is an impression with some persons—and it is not so very uncommon—that orig'nally the Matilija poppy grew nowhere else in the wild. This is a mistake, however. It was also found along the Santa Ynez River; also, in a somewhat smaller form, but otherwise apparently the same, it has always grown in the region of Santiago Peak in Orange county—where it is more profuse than it has ever been in Matilija Canyon. It is not at all now plentiful in the latter region. But it is there that I have found the finest specimens which I have ever seem in the wild.

At Lyon's Springs there are two trees, to which—for me, at least—a great deal of interest attaches. They are pecan trees. When Mr. Lyon homesteaded the place—something like fifty years ago—he planted some pecan nuts. Two of the resulting trees prospered and have grown to forest size, vying in stature with any of their species in the Mississippi Valley. Every year they are loaded with nuts; but the crop never ripens—from waiting for the frosty fall weather which never comes! Where they stand perpetual summer!

THE FORTUNE TELLER

to Joan and asked if she played tennis.

The next month for Betty was much like this game which followed, in which she was quite out of it all, watching the maneuvers of Paul and Joan from the sidelines. And little by little she began to regret; first, her impulsive departure, then her prophetic utterances, which apparently he had taken so seriously. For, no doubt, he knew she had gone to avoid his presence at the post and was reveling in his chance to demonstrate how little her repulses troubled him.

Then an odd thing occurred. In Joan's presence Paul invited her to go with him on a yachting party, and although surprised at herself, Betty heard herself accepting. On the evening of the trip she found Paul had drawn two chairs close together in a secluded corner of the stern deck. For a while they sat watching the play of the moonlight on the scudding foam of the wake. Then, out of a clear sky, Paul turned to her and said: "You see, Betty, I took your advice about dark ladies!"

So he had known, after all—probably through her aunt!

"Well, I'm sure you found it good!" she managed to answer lightly. "But how did you know it was I?"

"Very easily," returned the man. "Once having seen you in a similar character at an amateur performance in Simla, I could not very well forget your skillful portrayal. [illegible], having come several thousand miles in search of you, I, was looking for you everywhere, although, feeling myself, as I know you did, that there had been enough outside management in our affairs, I was determined to tell no one my errand."

"But Joan—and your mission!" stammered Betty.

"Joan understands the whole thing and was helping me out—besides, she's engaged, herself!" retorted Paul. "As for the mission, that was a lucky coincidence, I'll admit, but, knowing it was to be sent here, I pulled the wires and got myself appointed!"

"Aren't you afraid of the fate I foretold?" asked Betty whimsically, but not withdrawing her hand.

"If I am," declared Paul, "I'd rather endure it with you, my darling, than have all the luck in the world without you!" and won for his brave reply the reward it merited.

What to expect from shoe salesmen. The young man on the extreme left will hope to die if the shoes you want in a hurry aren't home by the time you get here. Yes siree! And just to show how much he likes you he'll write "Special" in great big black writing all over the box. Four days later you get the shoes. The tired gentleman in the center is down at the bottom a kindly soul, whose life has been warped by too many lady shoppers who insisted they had been told the shoes would be returnable after a month's wear if they got tired of the baby Louis heel and decided on the Cuban. Truthful outside of business hours. The furthest young man is the very grand type. "No madam," he comes back with, "only the cheaper shops carry that line." And then he will look very pained and move away—in a very grand manner.

"And now how about a nice pair of trees?"

Mrs. Walter Powley of Brockton Center is about to purchase a pair of Ground Grippers. Comfort first is Mrs. Powley's motto.

"But, my DEAR, think of the PRICE!" Mrs. Volney Jump of Pittsfield, Mass., is attending a shoe sale. She has found a perfectly remarkable line of footwear at 20 per cent off what they were selling at home. The slippers are just a little bit wrong and the shop is just a little bit wrong, and Mrs. Jump will look just a little bit wrong when she wears the new slippers. "But the PRICE, my dear! Priestly is one of those unfortunate people who just aren't "shoes conscious." They take anything the salesman tells them. Priestly has just been persuaded to purchase for the noble game of tennis a beautiful shoe, buckskin foundation, trimmed with leather strips in three colors.

She is No Longer Fat

She found a way to reduce her fat. It was a way far more pleasant than dieting or exercising would have been. This new way allowed her to eat foods without danger of becoming fat again.

She found Marmola Prescription Tablets. They aid the digestive system to obtain the full nutriment of food. They help Nature to turn food into muscle, bone and sinew instead of fat.

Marmola Prescription Tablets are made from the famous Marmola prescription. Thousands have found that these handy tablets give complete relief from obesity. And when the accumulation of fat is checked, reduction to normal, healthy weight soon follows.

All good drug stores the world over sell Marmola Prescription Tablets at one dollar a box. Ask your druggist for them, or order direct and they will be sent in plain wrapper, postpaid.

You, too, can have "A skin you love to touch"

A BEAUTIFUL skin, soft, smooth, faultlessly clear—any girl can have this charm.

Your skin is constantly changing.

Each day old skin dies and new takes its place. Give this new skin the right treatment, and see how soft and lovely you can keep it.

Use this special treatment for a very sensitive skin:

DIP a soft washcloth in warm water and hold it to your face.

Now make a warm water lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and dip your cloth up and down until the cloth is "fluffy" with the soft, white lather.

Rub this lathered cloth gently over your skin until the pores are thoroughly cleansed.

Rinse first with warm, then with clear, cool water and dry carefully.

THE first time you use this treatment it will leave your skin with a slightly drawn, tight feeling. This means that your skin is responding in the right way to this method of cleansing. After a few treatments the drawn feeling will disappear and your skin will gain a new softness and smoothness.

Get a cake of Woodbury's today. A 25-cent cake lasts a month or six weeks.

LUX FOR DISHWASHING

At last—relief from the three-times-a-day coarsening of the hands

THROW one tablespoonful of Lux into your dishpan—turn on the hot water. The flakes foam up into the richest, thickest lather you have ever had for dishwashing.

Three times a day you can wash dishes in this lather and still your hands will not be rough or red. Lux contains no free alkali or any other ingredient that could hurt the most sensitive skin—it is as easy on your hands as a fine toilet soap.

Begin today to wash your dishes the Lux way—don't permit your hands to have the old three-times-a-day-in-the-dishpan look. One package of Lux will last for 44 dishwashings—more than two weeks. Start using it now. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

Just a tablespoon to a pan. A single package does 44 dishwashings—all the dishes for more than two weeks

Yesterday

The picturesque Pueblo days of 1781, the infant city life of 1851, when Los Angeles was incorporated a city, and the throbbing pulse of the great city of Los Angeles today, enthralls the interest and fires the imagination. The seventy-one years of incorporated town and city growth is one of the fascinating chapters of the nation's history.

THE TEENIE WEENIES

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

THE LITTLE FOLKS MEET A POET AND HEAR A POEM.

BY WM. DONAHEY.

THE Teenie Weenie trucks, heavily loaded with frog hams and wild rice, were chugging merrily along through a dense wood. They were on their way home after a visit to the wild men's country. Suddenly a chipmunk appeared in the path ahead and the tiny cars came to a quick stop.

"Ah, at last!" cried the squirrel, arranging a small wreath of grass blades that hung jauntily over one ear. "I have scurried amid the woodland dells seeking you ever and anon from tuft to tuft,"

"What can we do for you, my friend?" asked the General as he pulled the emergency brake, for his tiny car had stopped on an ant hill.

"Is the poet with you?" asked the squirrel anxiously.

"No, the poet is not in our party."

"Oh, flimberbust!" exclaimed the squirrel. "I'm disappointed. I-I-I, but what's the use? You common mortals wouldn't understand—only a poet, one with a soul, could understand." Here the squirrel mopped a tear off his cheek with the ragged end of the wreath.

The Teenie Weenies were quite astonished at the squirrel's queer talk, and they were somewhat uncertain about just what should be said.

"If—if—if there is anything we could do for you we would be glad to do it," ventured the General so kindly that the squirrel left off weeping and brightened up considerably.

"Well, who knows and why not?" cried the squirrel. "It's this way. I heard from a scurrilous woodpecker that you were in the neighborhood, and I sought you out, hoping to find the poet in your midst. I have written a poem, and I wanted to read it to him. He would understand, for only poets have souls." The squirrel clasped his paws, rolled his eyes up and stared at a caterpillar that clung to a leaf of the blackberry bush overhead.

"Oh!" sighed the Lady of Fashion. "A poem. Oh, please, Mr. Squirrel, do read it to us."

> O pretty worm with colors bright,
> You are a very ugly sight, muttered the squirrel, still staring at the caterpillar.

"Looks to me as though this squirrel was a little cracked," whispered the Turk into Gogo's ear.

"He's done been eatin' too many dem nuts," answered the little colored fellow, softly.

"Let's see, where was I?" cried the squirrel, looking around at the Teenie Weenies. "Oh, yes. Lady wanted to hear poem. Well, you will all have to follow me. It's only a few steps.

HOW TO COLOR THE TEENIE WEENIES

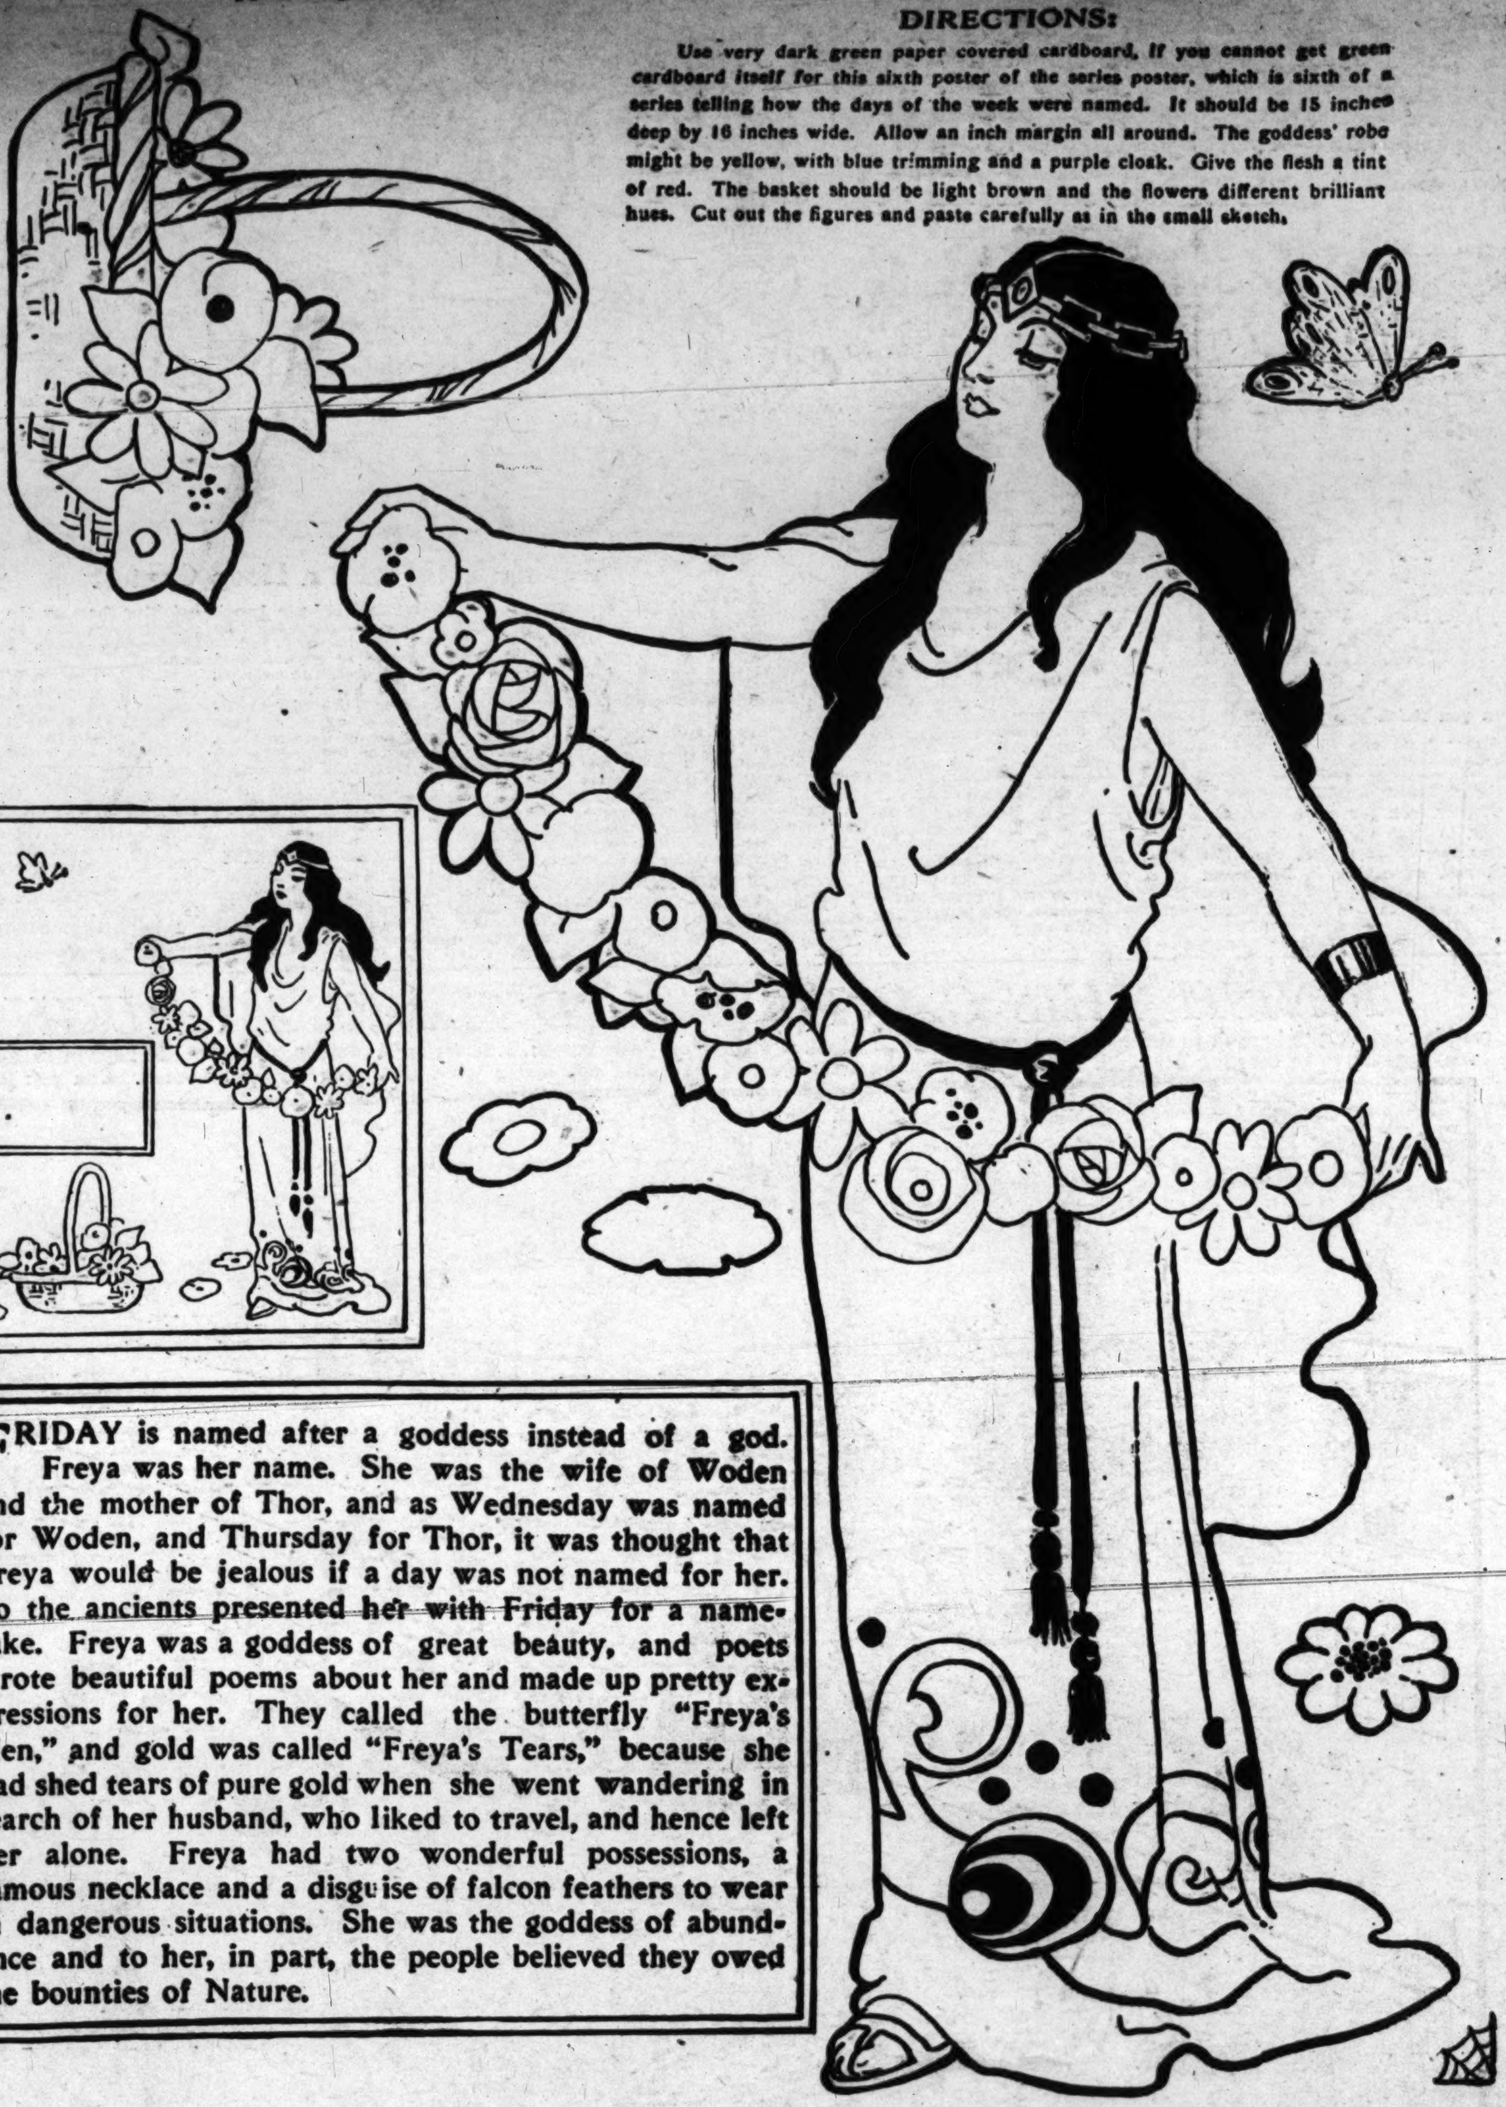
According to Mr. Squirrel's poem, "the moon was pale with fright, for ink was falling on the ground as black as white is white," so let us leave the moon white and put in a little of our time blackening up the ink drops. Then, with the tree trunk and fallen log done in brown, a dark brown, for "it was a dark and stormy storm," as the poem emphatically sets forth, we can turn our attention to the two frogs, the lazy lizard and the nervous mouse. You have all seen frogs, so you know they are green and a mouse is a grayish brown, so mix a little white with your greens and yellows and you will have a nice color for the nervous mouse. Lizards come in an assortment of colors, but let us make this lizard green and give him a red coat and a yellow tie. The pants of the frogs are blue and their shirts are red, whereas the mouse wears a blue shirt and pants. The rest of the picture you should finish yourself, though you must not forget the ink puddles on the ground.

How the Days Were Named

A Story for You to Read and Picture for You to Build

DIRECTIONS:

Use very dark green paper covered cardboard, if you cannot get green cardboard itself for this sixth poster of the series poster, which is sixth of a series telling how the days of the week were named. It should be 15 inches deep by 16 inches wide. Allow an inch margin all around. The goddess' robe might be yellow, with blue trimming and a purple cloak. Give the flesh a tint of red. The basket should be light brown and the flowers different brilliant hues. Cut out the figures and paste carefully as in the small sketch.



FRIDAY is named after a goddess instead of a god. Freya was her name. She was the wife of Woden and the mother of Thor, and as Wednesday was named for Woden, and Thursday for Thor, it was thought that Freya would be jealous if a day was not named for her. So the ancients presented her with Friday for a namesake. Freya was a goddess of great beauty, and poets wrote beautiful poems about her and made up pretty expressions for her. They called the butterfly "Freya's Hen," and gold was called "Freya's Tears," because she had shed tears of pure gold when she went wandering in search of her husband, who liked to travel, and hence left her alone. Freya had two wonderful possessions, a famous necklace and a disguise of falcon feathers to wear in dangerous situations. She was the goddess of abundance and to her, in part, the people believed they owed the bounties of Nature.

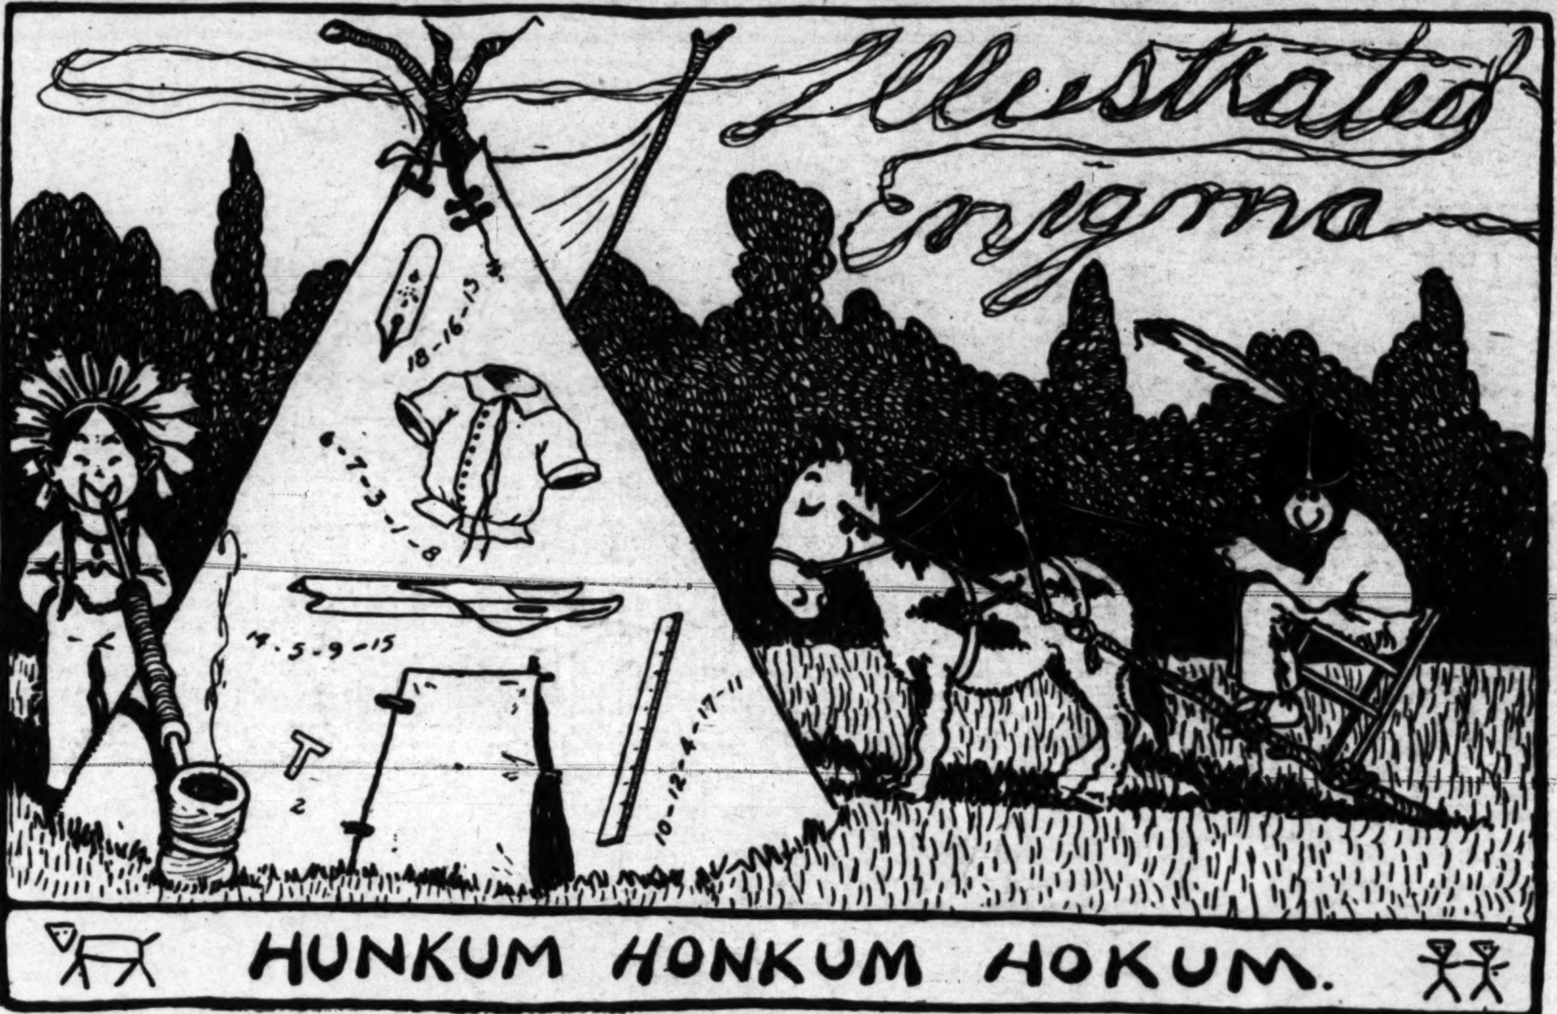
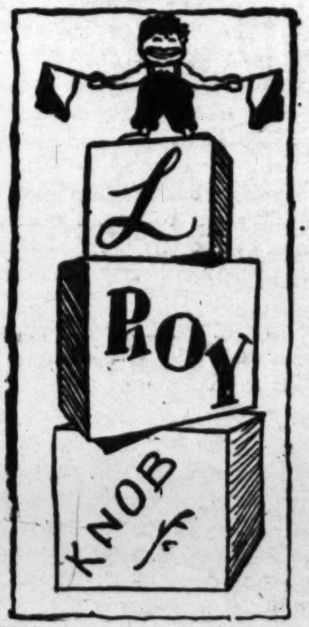
CRACKER BOX



Here is a hidden quotation consisting of eighteen letters. The way to solve it is as follows: Each picture on the tepee represents a word consisting of as many letters as there are numbers under it. For instance, the top picture represents a word of three letters. The first letter of that word is the eighteenth letter in the sentence; the second letter is the sixteenth letter in the sentence, etc. Can you solve the proverb?

Hidden Town

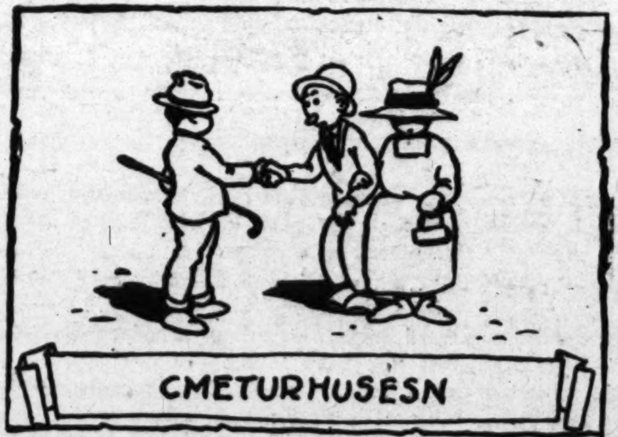


What Long Island town can you spell by using all the letters on the blocks?

SOAP CONSERVATION

"Bobby," inquired the mother, "did you wash your face before the music teacher came?" "Yes'm." "And your hands?" "Yes'm." "And your ears?" "Well, ma," said Bobby, judicially, "I washed the one that would be next to her."

Can You Read It?



Add one vowel a sufficient number of times to the collection of letters so as to make a readable sentence.

KNEW WHAT HORNS WERE FOR

Paul, aged 7, was enjoying his first trip to the farm, and was further honored by sharing the driver's high seat during the ride from the station through the open country.

"What's that?" he shrilly demanded of the driver, pointing to a large animal grazing near the roadside. "That ther's a cow," replied his companion good-naturedly. "What's them things on his head?" "Them's horns. Didn't you know cows got horns?" This amounted almost to a rebuff, but after a moment the little fellow asked timidly: "But how does he blow em?"

A YOUTHFUD REASON

A teacher in elementary mathematics looked hopefully about the room. "Now, children," she said, "I wish you to think very carefully before yon answer my next question. Which would you rather have, three bags with two apples in each bag, or two bags with three apples in each bag?" asked the teacher. "Three bags with two apples in each bag," said a boy in one of the last seats, while the class still debated as to the best answer. "Why, Paul?" asked the teacher. "Because there'd be one more bag to bust," announced the practical mathematician.

HAD A GOOD EXCUSE

Doris was rather backward in her studies and one day, when her father was inquiring into her standing at school, the little girl admitted that she was the lowest in her class. "Why, Doris, I am ashamed of you!" exclaimed the mother. "Why don't you study harder and try to get away from the foot of the class?" "It ain't my fault," replied Doris, in tones of injured innocence. "The little girl who has always been at the foot has left school."

INSIDE DISCIPLINE

While a country school superintendent in the South was making a tour of inspection he visited a negro school, where the order maintained by the teacher was remarkable. Every child seemed to be absorbed in the school work, and yet the teacher did not impress the superintendent as a disciplinarian. Finally, after watching proceedings for a while, he turned and said in a low tone to the teacher: "Johnson, how in the world do you keep such good order? Do you whip the children much?"

"No, sir," the teacher declared. "I never whip them."

"Do you keep them in?"

"No, sir; I never keep them in."

"Do you make them do extra work for punishment?"

"No, sir; I never make them do any extra work."

"Then, how ever do you manage them?"

"Well, sir, I'll tell you," the teacher replied confidentially. "When they don't do right I just eat up their dinner, and I don't have any more trouble."—[Ladies' Home Journal.

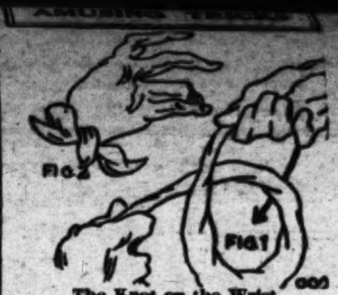
WAS THAT THE REASON?

A lady took her niece, aged 3½ years, to church for the first time. After they were seated, the little girl said something in her usual tone of voice, and the aunt whispered to her that in church people only whisper. She immediately responded: "Who's taking a nap?"



The Knot on the Wrist

The performer state that he can hold the opposite corners of a handkerchief and tie a knot in the handkerchief without removing either hand from its corner. This sounds impossible, but it can be done.

Merely loop the handkerchief as shown in Figure 1, and quickly thrust the right hand through the loop from the far side. The handkerchief will then he tied in a loop on the wrist as shown in Figure 2. Slide the handkerchief off the wrist, and show that the knot has been tied. If this trick is done rapidly no one will be able to follow the exact movements.

Turning Over the Card

A playing card is laid on the floor and is covered with a hat. The performer demonstrates that he can turn over the card without touching it. As he removes the hat, the card turns over.

The feat is accomplished by removing the hat with a quick rub along the carpet. A straw hat should be used. Give it a short, fast sweep and quickly lift the hat. The wind thus created will cause the card to turn over.

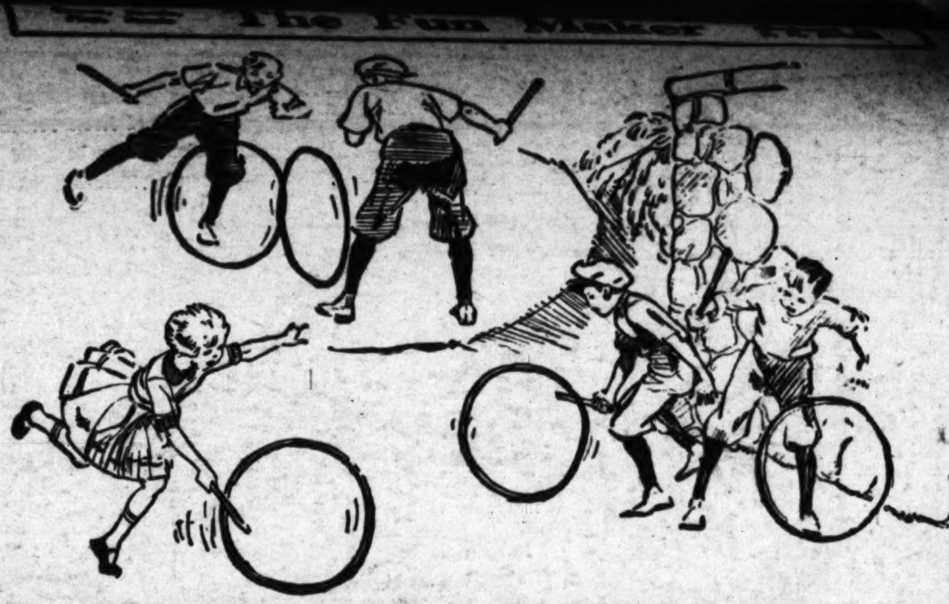
A Stylish Pup

Recently S. A. Pearce of Westport, Ind., bought a 2-month-old fox terrier. A few days ago the 4-year-old daughter of the Rev. C. L. Carmichael saw the pup on the front porch and told her mother: "Oh, mamma, Mrs. Pearce has a little white dog trimmed in black.



Whooping it Up with a Hoop Contest

"Did you ever fight a hoop duel?"

When the play man, V. K. Brown, asked this question, The Fun Maker was forced to admit that he hadn't even seen such a thing, much less fought one himself.

"Well," continued Mr. Brown, "this is how it is done.

"The fighting hoops must be heavy ones. Old bicycle rims are just the thing. Two boys mark off a square 'ring' about fifty feet on each side and station themselves in opposite corners. One of their friends acts as starter and referee.

KNIGHTS RIDE INTO RING

"When the starter gives the signal each boy advances toward the center, rolling his hoop with a stick. A point is scored when one boy, after making his hoop knock down the other, brings it back to his corner without letting it fall.

"Those engaged in such a duel need to use a lot of skill in twisting and driving the hoops. A hoop may be turned or jockeyed into position in any way, excepting that the stick must not be used to lift it and it must not be touched by the hands. Any such foul counts as a point for the opponent. Any number of falls may be considered a complete duel. Seven is a good number.

BOUNCING GAME NO CINCH

"Where there is a wall," continues Mr. Brown, "or side of some building, another good game can be played. All those in the race start off together at a certain point, rolling their hoops toward the wall, catching them on the rebound and rolling them back again." In the illustration above this game is shown.

"For developing skill in handling hoops, Mr. Brown suggests hoop-rolling races, either straightaway, following a crooked line or dodging between obstacles.

Dick's father was shocked to see his son kick his little playmate.

"Why did you kick John?" he

"I am tired of playing with him. I want him to go home," was Dickie's answer.

"Then why didn't you ask him to go home?"

"Oh!" (it was Dickie's turn to be shocked) "Why, Daddy," that wouldn't be polite."

The Scarecrow Plans an Escape

TIP slipped away from the girls and followed swiftly after the Soldier with the Green Whiskers. The invading army entered the City more slowly, for they stopped to dig emeralds out of the walls and paving stones with the points of their knitting needles. So the Soldier and the boy reached the palace before the news had spread that the City was conquered.

The Scarecrow and Jack Pumpkinhead were still playing at quoits in the courtyard when the game was interrupted by the abrupt entrance of the Royal Army of Oz, who came flying in without his hat or gun, his clothes in sad array and his long beard floating a yard behind him as he ran.

"Tally one for me," said the Scarecrow, calmly. "What's wrong, my man?" he added, addressing the Soldier.

"Oh, Your Majesty! Your Majesty! The City is conquered!" gasped the Royal Army, who was all out of breath.

"This is quite sudden," said the Scarecrow. "But please go and bar all the doors and windows of the palace, while I show this Pumpkinhead how to throw a quoit."

The Soldier hastened to do this, while Tip, who had arrived at his heels, remained in the courtyard to look at the Scarecrow with wondering eyes.

His Majesty continued to throw the quoits as coolly as if no danger threatened his throne, but the Pumpkinhead, having caught sight of Tip, ambled toward the boy as fast as his wooden legs would go.

"Good afternoon, noble parent!" he cried, delightedly. "I'm glad to see you are here. That terrible Saw-Horse ran away with me."

"I suspected it," said Tip. "Did you get hurt? Are you cracked at all?"

"No, I arrived safely," answered Jack, "and His Majesty has been very kind indeed to me."

At this moment the Soldier with the Green Whiskers returned, and the Scarecrow asked:

"By the way, who has conquered me?"

"A regiment of girls, gathered from the four corners of the Land of Oz," replied the Soldier, still pale with fear.

"But where was my Standing Army at the time?" inquired His Majesty, looking at the Soldier, gravely.

"Your Standing Army was running," answered the fellow, honestly, "for no man could face the terrible weapons of the invaders."

"Well," said the Scarecrow after a moment's thought, "I don't mind much the loss of my throne, for it's a tiresome job to rule over the Emerald City. And this crown is so heavy that it makes my head ache. But I hope the Conquerors have no intention of injuring me just because I happen to be the King."

"I heard them say," remarked Tip, with some hesitation, "that they intend to make a rag carpet of your outside and stuff their sofa cushions with your inside."

"Then I am really in danger," declared His Majesty, positively, "and it will be wise for me to consider a means to escape."

"Where can you go?" asked Jack Pumpkinhead.

"Why, to my friend the Tin Woodman, who rules over the Winkies and calls himself their Emperor," was the answer. "I am sure he will protect me."

Tip was looking out of the window. "The palace is surrounded by the enemy," said he. "It is too late to escape. They would soon tear you to pieces."

The Scarecrow sighed.

"In an emergency," he announced, "it is always a good thing to pause and reflect. Please excuse me while I pause and reflect."

"But we also are in danger," said the Pumpkinhead, anxiously. "If any of these girls understand cooking, my end is not far off!"

"Nonsense!" exclaimed the Scarecrow; "they're too busy to cook, even if they know how!"

"But should I remain here a prisoner for any length of time," protested Jack, "I'm liable to spoil."

"Ah! Then you would not be fit to associate with," returned the Scarecrow. "The matter is more serious than I suspected."

"You," said the Pumpkinhead, gloomily, "are liable to live for many years. My life is necessarily short. So I must take advantage of the few days that remain to me."

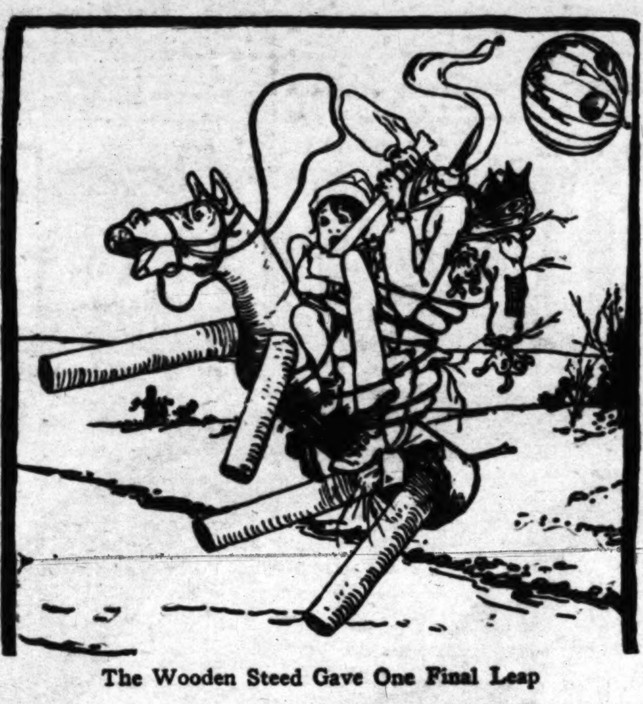
"There, there! Don't worry," answered the Scarecrow, soothingly; "if you'll keep quiet long enough for me to think, I'll try to find some way for us all to escape."

So the others waited in patient silence while the Scarecrow walked to a corner and stood with his face to the wall for a good five minutes. At the end of that time he faced them with a more cheerful expression upon his painted face.

"Where is the Saw-Horse you rode here?" he asked the Pumpkinhead.

"Why, I said he was a jewel, and so your man locked him up in the royal treasury," said Jack.

"It was the only place I could think of, Your Majesty," added the Soldier, fearing he had made a blunder.



The Wooden Steed Gave One Final Leap

"It pleases me very much," said the Scarecrow. "Has the animal been fed?"

"Oh, yes; I gave him a heaping peck of sawdust."

"Excellent!" cried the Scarecrow. "Bring the horse here at once."

The Soldier hastened away, and presently they heard the clattering of the horse's wooden legs upon the pavement as he was led into the courtyard.

His Majesty regarded the steed critically.

"He doesn't seem especially graceful," he remarked, musingly; "but I suppose he can run?"

"He can, indeed," said Tip, gazing upon the Saw-Horse admiringly.

"Then, bearing us upon his back, he must make a dash through the ranks of the rebels and carry us to my friend the Tin Woodman," announced the Scarecrow.

"He can't carry four!" objected Tip.

"No, but he may be induced to carry three," said His Majesty. "I shall therefore leave my Royal Army behind. For, from the ease with which he was conquered, I have little confidence in his powers."

"Still, he can run," declared Tip, laughing.

"I expected this blow," said the Soldier, sulkily; "but I can bear it. I shall disguise myself by cutting off my lovely green whiskers. And, after all, it is no more dangerous to face those reckless girls than to ride this fiery, untamed wooden horse!"

"Perhaps you are right," observed His Majesty. "But, for my part, not being a soldier, I am fond of danger. Now, my boy, you must mount first. And please sit as close to the horse's neck as possible."

Tip climbed quickly to his place, and the Soldier and the Scarecrow managed to hoist the Pumpkinhead to a seat just behind him. There remained so little space for the King that he was liable to fall off as soon as the horse started.

"Fetch a clothesline," said the King to his Army, "and tie us all together. Then if one falls off we will all fall off."

And while the Soldier was gone for the clothesline His Majesty continued: "It is well for me to be careful, for my very existence is in danger."

"I have to be as careful as you do," said Jack.

"Not exactly," replied the Scarecrow; "for if anything happened to me, that would be the end of me. But if anything happened to you, they could use you for seed."

The Soldier now returned with a long line and tied all three firmly together, also lashing them to the body of the Saw-Horse; so there seemed little danger of their tumbling off.

"Now throw open the gates," commanded the Scarecrow, "and we will make a dash to liberty or to death."

The courtyard in which they were standing was located in the center of the great palace, which surrounded it on all sides. But in one place a passage led to an outer gateway, which the Soldier had barred by order of his sovereign. It was through this gateway His Majesty proposed to escape, and the Royal Army now led the Saw-Horse along the passage and unbarred the gate, which swung backward with a loud crash.

"Now," said Tip to the horse, "you must save us all. Run as fast as you can for the gate of the City, and don't let anything stop you."

"All right," answered the Saw-Horse, gruffly, and dashed away so suddenly that Tip had to gasp for breath and hold firmly to the post he had driven into the creature's neck.

How to Make Spider-Web and Criss-Cross Aerials

HELPFUL HINT FOR RADIO FANS

Expert Tells How to Make Spiderweb and Crisscross Aerial That Makes Hearing Plainer

Materials: Two-by-fours, insulators, wire, spikes.

After experimenting with many different kinds of aerials, I have taken down my flat and single-strand aerials because I get better results with the ones shown here for both crystal and bulb sets.

Since people do not care to invest in large lightning switches, I have shown first an inside aerial, which does not require one.

To make aerial A, cut two-by-fours according to dimensions for the two frames. On the six-foot pieces lay off the locations for the insulators, and project across to the arms to which they are fastened. Cheap, white, porcelain insulators, costing 2 and 3 cents each, and No. 14 bare copper wire are satisfactory for the aerial.

After the frame has been made and the insulators fastened in place it is ready to be installed in the attic. The six-foot pieces can be fastened to the studding with long spikes, one at each end of the attic. A wood strip from the point of the frame to the floor will help brace the frame.

To wire the frame start at the insulator nearest the center, running the wire twice around each insulator. The lead is made from the insulator fastened to the six-foot piece.

Aerial B is not as easy to erect as A, because it requires a ladder and considerable climbing to get it properly placed on top of the house. Use wooden pieces for the bracing on the ridge of the roof and wire for the bracing from the tops of the poles. The same kind of wire and insulators are to be used as described for aerial A.

The farther apart the frames or poles are the better, because the longer the aerial will be.

Both these aerials have crystal sets attached and are giving satisfaction in Detroit. The broadcasting is received much plainer than it was on other aerials.

FOR FIRST-GRADE TEACHERS

Little Robert was very bright and at the end of the first term at school was promoted to the second grade. He was much attached to his first-grade teacher and was loath to leave her. "Miss Eva," he said, "I do wish you knew enough to teach second grade, so I wouldn't have to leave you."

Efficiency

Lee Junior, age 4, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Lee Bassett of Columbus, Ind., has learned a great deal about efficiency, as his mother has many time and labor-saving methods which she puts into practice around the house, and which have made a deep impression on Lee Junior. Frequently at night the youngster looks out at the stars, and recites "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star." One night recently when about to recite his little piece, he paused, hesitated awhile and appeared to be in a deep study. In a moment his face lighted, and he evidently found the efficiency idea he wished to apply in the case, for he began:

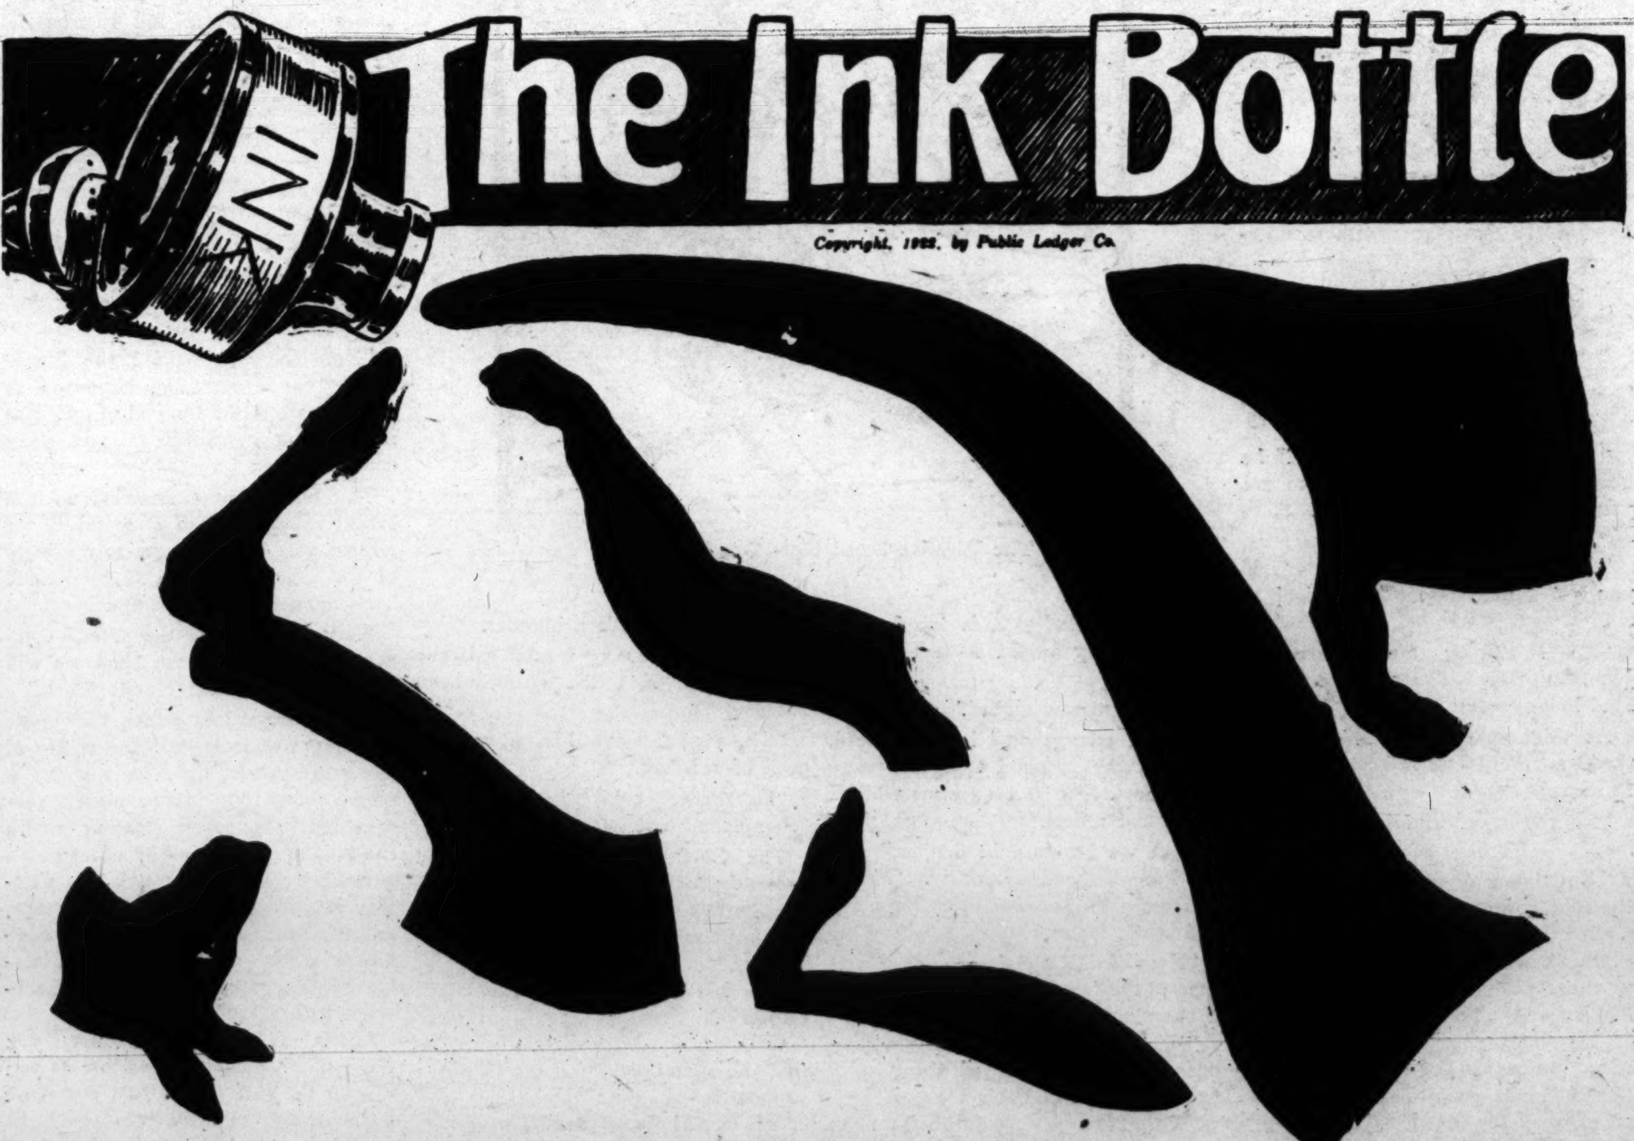
The Ink Bottle



Copyright, 1922, by Public Ledger Co.

The artist who drew this picture is a very careless fellow. Just as he is about to make a fine picture he upsets the ink bottle. But the bottle seems to have more sense than the artist, for it throws the ink into certain forms for you to cut out and piece together. By so doing you will see the picture the artist intended making. You can mount the entire picture on thin cardboard and then cut out the different forms and piece them together, or you can cut them from this sheet and put them together without mounting them. A new one will appear each Sunday. Save all of them and when you have a few sets you can have an "INK-BOTTLE GAME" with your playmates. Give each playmate a set of pieces to put together, and the one who puts his or hers together first must call out "INK BOTTLE!" That player, of course, wins the game or a certain number of points.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS HAVE BUSY SUMMER

Learn to Do Things in the Great Out-of-Doors and Get Credits in Their Organization

The most interesting event of the summer months with the Iva Galalina Camp Fire Girls of Santa Monica was a night spent on the beach; each member with her own ponchos and food. In the moonlight they sang and talked about all the affairs that traverse a young girl's mind. The "special thrill" of the trip was that they spent a while night out in the lonesome without other than the regular guardian. The girls were appointed to sit up in relays and watch over the camp and keep the fires burning during the wee sma' hours. The next morning they cooked breakfast and went in swimming. Of course, the night spent on the ground under the open sky gave them a special credit toward a brown bead. The honor which they received says "Sleep on the ground five nights" or "Cook an egg on a hot stone."

The Elowin Camp Fire Girls of Inglewood have been conducting a weekly story hour for the small children of the community with a large attendance each week.

The Tawanka Camp Fire Girls of the Euclid Heights Presbyterian Church have just returned from a two weeks' vacation spent at Balboa Beach, where they have been learning and doing—things the Camp Fire way.

Each girl had the chance to win at least four new honors while at the camp. Some of the requirements were as follows: Bait a hook, catch, clean and cook a fish. Walk forty miles in any ten days. Do all the camp cooking without help or advice for one day and for at least four persons. Cook an egg on a hot stone. Sleep on the ground for five nights. Swim 500 yards at one time.

The following girls were awarded the rank of Woodgatherers at the last fire council meeting held on the evening before their departure from the beach: Eunice Lynch, Ada Decrow, Elizabeth Donker, Isabelle Hill, Torch Amy Housekeeper and Ruth Douglass.

THE SCARECROW PLANS AN ESCAPE

Several of the girls, who stood outside guarding the palace, were knocked over by the Saw Horse's mad rush. Others ran screaming out of the way, and only one or two jabbed their knitting-needles frantically at the escaping prisoners. Tip got one small prick in his left arm, which smarted for an hour afterward; but the needles had no effect upon the Scarecrow or Jack Pumpkinhead, who never even suspected they were being prodded.

As for the Saw-Horse, he made a wonderful record, upsetting a fruit cart, overturning several meek looking men, and finally bowling over the new Guardian of the Gate—a fussy little fat woman appointed by General Jinjur.

Nor did the impetuous charger stop them. Once outside the walls of the Emerald City he dashed along the road to the West with fast and violent leaps that shook the breath out of the boy and filled the Scarecrow with wonder.

Jack had ridden at this mad rate once before, so he devoted every effort to holding with both hands, his pumpkin head upon its stick, enduring meantime the dreadful jolting with the courage of a philosopher.

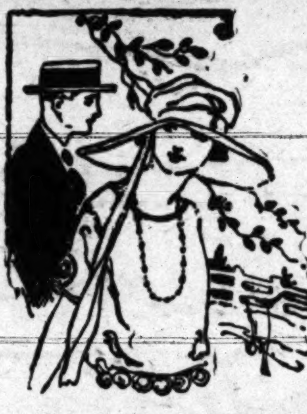
"Slow him up! Slow him up!" shouted the Scarecrow. "My straw is all shaking down into my legs."

But Tip had no breath to speak, so the Saw-Horse continued his wild career unchecked and with unabated speed.

Presently they came to the banks of a wide river, and without a pause the wooden steed gave one final leap and launched them all in mid-air.

A second later they were rolling, splashing and bobbing about in the water, the horse struggling frantically to find a rest for its feet and its riders being first plunged beneath the rapid current and then floating upon the surface like corks.

Next Story: "The Journey to the Tin Woodman," in which the four travelers manage to reach the opposite bank of the river in safety and start to go through a part of the country which was once inhabited by dangerous Winged Monkeys. Are the monkeys still there, or is their journey peaceful and uninterrupted? The next installment will tell you.



OUT OF HER SPHERE

Waiter: Yes, sir. Light or dark meat?

A PUZZLING REPAST

It is told that two Arabs sa down to a dinner of bread, on contributing five loaves and th other three. A passing strange desired to eat with them, to whic they agreed. The eight loave were consumed and each had a equal share.

The stranger, to pay for his par of the spread, laid down eigh pieces of silver and departed. The owner of the five loaves took u five pieces of the silver, leavin three for the other, who objected and insisted upon one-half of th coins.

The case came before a magistrate, who gave a proper adjudication. What was his decision?

THREE IN ONE

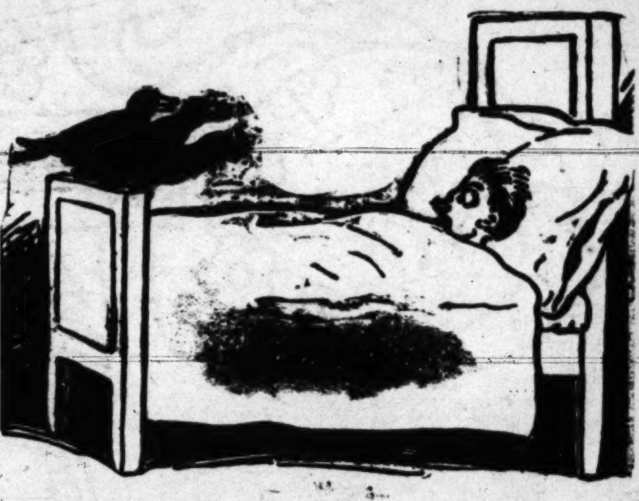
I am a word of three letters signifying to spoil or injure; reverse I am a male animal, and transposed I am a limb.

Spell me.

ROOSTING WITH THE BIRDS

"One of the things that struck me as odd and interesting during my sojourn in Italy," relates a returned traveler, "was the tameness of the native birds, which fly in and out of the houses and frequently nest indoors. During my stay in one of the towns famous for an architectural freak, I found the hotels overcrowded and had to be content with quarters in the garret of a little inn. Later I discovered I had invaded a bird colony, the feathered tribe having taken over the rafters for their domestic affairs.

"The accompanying sketch from my scrap book presents a truthful picture of my first morning in the garret, and if you will carefully examine the text under the sketch you will find concealed the name of the place where the incident occurred."



THE MOMENT I WAKED UP I SAW THREE CROWS ON THE BEDPOST!"

A DOUBLE MEANING

Mr. Washington Johnson, when he came home a few hours late for the evening meal and found the larder as empty as his stomach, asked the good wife:

"What time am it and where am the cold chicken?"

The questions naturally call for two replies, but Mrs. Johnson was not in the humor for protracted conversation, so she uttered one word, which answered both of his questions. What was the word?

A FINNY PUZZLE

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, accompanied by their son, Tommy, their daughter, Bella, and their prospective son-in-law went fishing last summer.

Mrs. S. and Tommy together caught twenty-six fish, Tommy and Bella together caught thirty-one, Bella and her young man togeth caught fifteen. Mr. S. and his pro pective son-in-law together caug ten, while what appears to be key to the piscatorial puzzle is t fact that Mr. S. and Mrs. S. caug a like number of fish.

What is the largest possible t tal catch under the circumstance

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S CRACKER BOX

The answer to "Add and Subtract" is: Field.

The answer to "Incomplete" is: He eats apples sitting on a hard seat.

"Out Out:" The laborer is worthy of his reward.

"Difficult Reading:" Many hands make light work.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLES

"A GRAMMATICAL PUZZLE"

The grammatical changes are effected by substituting S for L in the first word, so as to make the line read;

"Set the rich, great and noble."

"PROFITS IN BUNCHES"

Joel contributed $600 and John $400.

"A CHARADE"

The word—BUGBEAR.

"A MISSING CONSONANT"

Restoring the letter D makes th sentence read as follows:

DID DADDY DOZE?

"A PUZZLE SUM"

WEB plus STEER minus leaves WEBSTER.

"GEOGRAPHICAL REBUS"

The places in Massachusetts are Salem and Hull.

NEW KIND OF AUTO

David Cook, age 5, of Wabash, has been around automobiles ever since he was born, but was never at Lake Wawasee until last Sunday. A friend of the Cook family had the youngster out showing him the sights, and finally pointed out a sail boat which was traveling in the distance. For several minutes the boy was unable to find the boat. Suddenly he spied it and said, "Oh, you mean that auto with the side curtains on!"

Since then he has been telling his playmates of the automobile which puts on the side curtains and then runs on water.

MIXED IN HIS LESSONS

Teacher: William, what are tw and four?

Willie (his mind on vacation:) Prepositions, miss.

THE TEENIES MEET A POET

It's right down there on the bank of the creek."

The Teenie Weenies parked their cars under some bushes and followed the squirrel to the creek. On a clean place in the sand the little people saw many marks and scratches, but not a single word could they make out.

The squirrel took off his wreath and, hanging it on a daisy, he held up his paw for silence and began:

It was a dark and stormy storm,
The moon was pale with fright,
For ink was falling on the ground
As black as white is white.

Two frogs were waiting silently
As loud as they could wait,
With pistols in their froggish hands,
Their eyes a-shooting hate.

A lazy lizard, lean and slim,
Stood sitting on a stool,
A-smiling at the foolish frogs
About to fight a duel.

A nervous mouse sat up and down
Upon a sticky brier,
And every time he settled down
He rose a little higher.

The scene was very tense indeed,
So tense it nearly broke,
For it was very plain to see
A frog was soon to croak.

Each pistol primed with pepper
And filled with mustard seed.

The frogs stood ready for the word
To do a dirty deed.

Get ready, frogs, the lizard cried,
Advance and fire at will—

Here the squirrel began to dance up and down. He pulled his whiskers out by the pawful. He screamed so hard the Teenie Weenies were terribly disturbed.

"It's the woodchuck! It's the woodchuck!" cried the squirrel. "He's rolled out the last two verses. He's a wretch to roll on my poem, and I hope he gets fleas—little, hard-to-catch, biting fleas."

"Try to be calm," said the General.

"I won't be calm!" snapped the squirrel. "I will not be calm under any circumstances. I'm uncalmed f life."

"Can't you remember the last tw verses?" asked the Lady of Fashic after the squirrel had quieted a bi "We'd like so much to know wh happened to the frogs."

"Let me think," said the squirre scratching his ear thoughtfully. "It something like this:

One was wounded in the pants
The other lost a toe—

"It's no use—I can't do it. I ca do it," and before the Teenie Weeni could stop him the squirrel dash into the woods and disappeared.

The Complexion that Charms

IT is not the cheek that glows with the red of the rose, nor the skin that has the wax-like pallor of the lily. The two must be mingled in a hue that is delicate, modest, natural. And therein lies the serene assurance of Bourjois' [pronounced Bourge-wah] Java* Face Powder. Designed to please the critical eyes of the women of France it always has found favor with American women, because Java is, before all else, natural. Tens of thousands of American women whose faces never show a trace of powder, but whose complexions are universally admired, these are the women who are using Java, throughout the length and breadth of the land.

ASHES OF ROSES* ROUGE

and Rouge Mandarine,* two of the twelve leading preparations in the Bourjois Cabinet Assortment at your drug store. Ashes of Roses is named for the deep, rich red in the heart of the rose; and Rouge Mandarine for its softer, more delicate hue. Look for them at your dealer's.

Weaving Magic Was Needed to Do This!

As amazing as the wonders worked by any ancient magician are the skilled processes that convert a cotton yarn into a shimmering, silky-surfaced fabric!

That Lingette was welcome—that women have long wanted this fabric that looks and hangs and drapes and clings like silk, and wears and washes like cotton—has been proved by its instant success last spring.

Lingette

Everybody thinks it's silk

Now Lingette is made in foulard designs, in gay-printed dark colors, and an array of lovely light tints for autumn frocks, coat linings, lingerie, bloomers, and a host of other uses.

Because Lingette has been so successful, many imitations now exist. Some may appear at first so much like Lingette, it is only after washing and wearing that you can distinguish the false from the true. So do be sure to look for "Lingette" on the selvage: "Lingette" in the label of the made-up garment!
